American Indian Artists, a six-part television series, will premier on the Nebraska Educational Television (NETV) Network on Tuesday, Aug. 3 at 7:30 p.m.

The half-hour programs, which will be repeated on Fridays at 1:30 p.m., will profile seven prominent Southwestern Indian arts, focusing on the interplay between traditional values and the aesthetic values in the individual artists' lives and work.

Joseph Lonewolf and Grace Medicine Flower, Santa Clara Indians who enriched the pottery traditions of their ancestors, are featured in the premiere program.

Succeeding programs present Fritz Scholder, a California mission painter; Allan Houser, a Chiricahua-Apache sculptor; R.C. Gorman, a Navajo painter and printmaker; Helen Hardin, a Santa Clara painter and Charles Loloma, a Hopi jeweler whose complex work combines tradition and innovation.

Two other shows premiering this week on NETV are Planet of Man and Inner Tennis. Upheavals in the earth's crust which upset the usual order of man's life is the subject of Planet of Man. In the 12-part series, film of earthquakes, volcanoes, tidal waves and hurricanes is combined with animated models which reduce massive forces to a scale which makes them recognizable and understandable.

In the premiere program, Voices of Time and the Earth, on Wednesday, Aug. 4 at 7:30 p.m., the Grand Canyon in Arizona is used to describe the age of the planet Earth.

Inner Tennis is a series of six half-hour tennis lessons derived from the best-selling book, The Inner Game of Tennis, which advocates a mental approach to the sport. Each program of the series will be presented as an active tennis clinic and will feature as host, Tim Gallwey, author of the book.

Gallwey uses his unique teaching methods to demonstrate to a class of players ranging from beginners to advanced, that inside each of them is a better tennis player waiting to be set free. By discovering the "natural learning process" the players will learn to improve their games in the same way children learn to walk, he tells his audience. The show will begin Tuesday, Aug. 3 at 8:30 p.m.
