Unified Europe is goal

A 1978 direct election of representatives to a European parliamient will serve as the first step toward forming a democratic base for a unified European community, lan Wrigglesworth. lan Wrigglesworth.
Speaking on the UNL campus Monday, Whe theginning of a US, of E woun" the "beginning of a U.S. of Europe," and predicted it will have a "profound impact Wrigglesworth said the changing relationship between countries already can be seen by European powers' recent statements on foreign issues. But, he said it will be a long time before total integration will be achieved.
"We're going to have the same sort of battle you had in your beginning. Nevertheless, the real start will be with the general election and then anything may be that a European community might possibly share pract exploration costs and research with the U.S.

Wrigglesworth, who is considering running as one of Britain's representatives, said the directly elected parliament will give Europe a sense of identity.
He said a recent referendum showed by a 2 to 1 majority that the English people want Britain to be part of the parliament. Although not all European countries have agreed to become members, Wrigglesworth said he thinkgs they eveatually will.

Comparing England to the U.S., Wrigglesworth said the U.S. has "picked up some of our past diseases." He said there have been no strikes in England for two years following a voluntary wage and the TUC. The TUC is the British equivalent of America's AFL-CIO.

Wrigglesworth said the trade union began doing what he called industry's job of reducing inflation. He said this has had a remarkable impact helping to cut infation rates from 28 to 10 per cent.
He added that a nation as large as the U.S. could never get this cooperation.

Comparing the education systems between the two countries, Wrigglesworth said there is more emphasis in America on business schools than in Britain.
"You go in more for business education than we do. That's one of your strengths." He said Britain has more on-thejob training by major companies than by business colleges.

Wrigglesworth was this year's first guest of CBA's Executive-In-Residence Program.
