Amendments ...

The proposal would specifically authorize the Legislature to permit school districts to contract with private non-sectarian institutions for the provision of service beneficial to handicapped children. Currently, appropriation of public funds cannot be made to any school or institution not exclusively controlled by the state.

Amendment No. 6, part 2, also leaning towards passage, would change the language of the Nebraska Constitution to allow governmental grants or loans to be made to students attending private schools.

Students would get aid

This proposed change would allow the Legislature to provide financial aid to students attending non-public, non-sectarian educational institutions of post-high school education. The amendment would remove the constitutional barrier providing aid to privately funded institutions.

Voters favored the defeat of Amendment No. 7, a measure to allow the broadening of the Industrial Development Act. It would permit cities and counties to issue revenue bonds for financing business enterprises other than manufacturing or industrial enterprises not currently covered under its provisions.

Amendment No. 8 defeat seen

A narrow defeat of Amendment No. 8, to approve a pay hike for state senators from $400 per month to $675 per month, was seen early Wednesday morning. It had also met with controversy prior to the election. Senators now receive $4,800 per year, expenses for one trip to Lincoln and one trip home per session, and $200 worth of postage. Only monthly compensation would be affected by the amendment. During the last 15 years, the annual average compensation of state senators nationwide, has gone from $2,648 in 1960 to $10,027 in 1976. In Nebraska, in 1960, a senator's salary was $2,400. Today it is $4,800, less than half the national average. Nebraska ranks 40th among the 50 states in the amount of compensation it gives its state senators.
