

No break for plants during vacation

With Christmas approaching at full speed, it is time to start thinking about plants. What can be done with them for those three weeks of vacation?

Steve Johnson, owner of Green Fingers plant store, advised not leaving plants alone for that long unless they are succulents, such as cacti.

Cacti will get along fine, he said, but "regular, normal foliage plants" are going to get too dry. Johnson said some people set their plants in water when they plan to be gone, but doing that is just like watering the plants everyday. The plants will rot, he warned.

More than 80 per cent of the plants should never be watered more than once a week, he said.

The best thing for the student to do, Johnson said, would be to find a friend who is staying in Lincoln and let them water the plants. Write a schedule and give it to the person, he suggested, and "make sure they know something about plants."

Watch plants

Roger Braden, greenhouse manager and horticulturist at Tyrell's Flowers, also did not recommend leaving plants unattended for three weeks.

If the student decides to leave his plants, Braden suggested sacking the plants in a closed plastic bag, creating a terrarium effect.

"The plant doesn't lose any water," he said. "It's recycled."

Braden said he had heard of people leaving their plants in water in the bathtub, but he did not recommend the practice. He also heard of different groups setting up a plant sitting service and charging for each plant taken care of over the holidays.

Students who want to take their plants home for Christmas should protect the plants from the cold, Braden said, by placing them in a closed plastic bag or paper sack.

Warm plants

"Don't keep them in the cold any longer than you have to," he said, "and keep the car warm at all times."

Johnnie Jones, Frontier Airlines manager, said plants can be carried on planes free of charge, if they can fit under the seat. Larger plants must be shipped as freight, he said.

Jones said he would not advise shipping plants this way unless they are packed by professional florists. Most of the plants are usually shipped by the flower distributors, he said.
