

Nebraska could profit from international banking

International Banking in Nebraska could become a new and profitable venture, according to Thomas Potter, vice president of international banking at the National Bank of Commerce.

Potter was keynote speaker Wednesday at the UNL International Studies Institute and U.S. State Dept. sponsored conference on foreign policy in Latin America and Africa. He said Nebraska could and should invest in agricultural endeavors in underdeveloped countries.

"It would be a perfect match-up because Nebraska is very unique in that they have the rare ability to coordinate the agricultural and business world in a very workable way," he said.

"The major weakness of most underdeveloped countries is that they have put too much emphasis on industry and placed little or no emphasis on food production. They are now finding themselves in a position where they are finding it increasingly hard to feed themselves, so with our surplus knowledge coinciding with their needs our chances of success are good."

The major problem with help abroad is deciding how applicable our techniques are abroad, he said.

"I don't think this is that serious because they need food and we are able to produce it so we can be of assistance," he said.

Latin America and Africa are logical markets for Nebraska banks because of the state's agricultural knowledge and those countries agricultural deficiency, he added.

He said the role of the U.S. in supporting and financing underdeveloped countries is increasing greatly because there are no more domestic markets available.

"When banks have excess deposits, we find it necessary to extend more loans and grants, so overseas financing is the logical source for markets."

Recently, loans and grants are pending with Venezuela, as contacts have been made in that country by manufacturing companies in this area, he added.

This is the way of the future as banks will be looking more and more to foreign markets for loan and grant opportunities, he said.

Allocation proposals heard in upcoming FAB meeting

An open hearing on the University Health Center budget and recommendations for 13 student organizations will be considered at the Fees Allocation Board (FAB) meeting at 6 p.m. Thursday in the Nebraska East Union.

The FAB made tentative allocations for 14 student organizations at their last meeting on March 17. The board reviewed subcommittee recommendations based on earlier hearings on each organization.

After discussion and clarification of expenses by representatives of several organizations, eight recommendations passed as originally moved and six passed as amended.

INDEPENDENCE DAY
 Directed by Bobby Roth

"INDEPENDENCE DAY is the true story of a young black couple who came to Los Angeles from the South seeking a new life. The film depicts their struggle for self-determination in the working class community, a struggle against unemployment and poverty; a struggle for better education, better housing, and better relations with each other. INDEPENDENCE DAY is a chronicle of the difficulties that often befall black people trying to better their lives, both individually and collectively."
