

New police station does not mean new jail, says chief

By Gail Stork

Plans to relocate the police station as part of the preliminary capital improvement program will not necessarily include a new jail, according to Lincoln Police Chief George Hansen.

A new jail to meet the federal court order for fresh air and outdoor recreation for prisoners is necessary Hansen said.

Although no plans have been discussed, Hansen said a new jail probably would be located in the airport area instead of with the police station in the city's central district.

He said the police station is being requested because of an inadequate 7,000 square feet for the 300 employees now working in the station.

Hansen said his department lacks training and laboratory space, classrooms, interviewing rooms and a program to provide 24-hour public access to records.

The police station must be located in the Lincoln city center according to the completed Comprehensive Plan, not yet final because of court action against it.

Louis Shackleford, member of the City-County Planning Commission, said the Haymarket Square site bordered by 9th, 10th, Q and R streets is one of the locations under consideration. If approved for the new police headquarters, a new jail probably would be included on that site, Shackleford said.

He said he could see no valid objection to having a jail on the site, even though it is part of the gateway to the city. He said he doubted whether a modern, good-looking building, housing just the police department and a jail would give a bad impression to anyone entering the city.

Shackleford suggested moving the courts, located in the City-County Bldg., to the old federal building. If this could be carried out, Shackleford said, it would be sensible to have the police station and jail both in the Haymarket Square, which is only one block from the federal building.

He said this would allow easy transfer of prisoners among police headquarters, jail and court.

Shackleford said few plans have been made for a new jail to meet the federal standards. He said authorities will try to continue using the present jail until a new one is built.

Hansen said even the police station is in the request stages. It is one in a book of city department requests three inches thick, he added. But the proposed budget for 1977-78 does include a total of $260,000 for planning a new station and a new jail, Shackleford said.

He also said more than $5 million for construction and furnishing of the buildings is projected in the 1978-79 budget.

Whatever the commission decides concerning the location of the new police department, with or without a new jail, will have to be approved by the mayor and city council before it can become part of the city's actual budget, Shackleford said.
