

Vote or no vote, the taxpayer pays

Tuesday's city primary election cost Lincoln taxpayers almost $3 a vote, according to Election Commissioner Bill Davidson.

Including 139 absentee and disabled ballots, the 16,245 total was still below Davidson's projected turnout of 20,000 voters.

Davidson said the $48,000 cost of the election would be the same no matter how many voters showed up, so taxpayers should take advantage of a privilege they are paying for anyway.

He attributed the low turnout to "a general apathy of the voting public towards voting in general." He cited the efforts of student and civic organizations to encourage voting, but said the numbers have been consistently low in spite of them.

Even the lowering of the voting age to 18 has yielded no increase in voter turnout, he said.

He said citizens probably will not lose their apathy toward voting until this privilege is threatened. Other than that, offering green stamps at the polls may be a solution, he added jokingly.

Results of Tuesday's primary race:

City Council	Votes
Sue Bailey	6,794
Joseph Hampton	6,494
John Robinson	6,441
Leo Scherer	5,706
Dorothy Walker	4,077
T. R. Allan	3,158

All candidates for Lincoln Board of Education and Airport Authority positions will be included on the May general election ballot.
