

Arab representative to speak

A representative of the Saudi Arabian government touring the United States will speak at 2 p.m. Tuesday in the College of Business Administration third floor lounge.

Tarek Shawaf, a consultant-engineer and formerly in the Saudi Ministry of Agriculture and Water, will discuss United States-Arab relations and the Arab oil boycott among other things, according to Ron Alexander, coordinator of Shawaf's visit.

The purpose of the visit, is to bring Saudi Arabia closer to the American people, Alexander said, to give Saudi's an idea of what Americans think of them, to learn of technological advances and create a market for them in Arabia.

Alexander is a law student at Omaha's Creighton University and president of the Creighton International Law Society. He is a 1971 UNL graduate.

Shawaf "is very well versed in Saudi-American relations," according to information from the Saudi government.

"The Arab boycott, which is one of the thorns in the good relations between the two countries, will be extensively discussed."

Shawaf and other Saudi's on assignment visiting the country will report their findings to the heads of the ministries who assigned them to the visit when they return, the government information said.

Shawaf is a graduate of the Worcester Polytechnic Institute in Worcester, Mass. He joined the Saudi government in 1965 as a technical adviser to the Ministry of Agriculture and Water and then became group projects director for that ministry.

In 1967, he established his own construction engineering firm, the first in the kingdom. It is now the largest consulting engineering firm in the country.

Board to select

The UNL publications committee, which acts as publisher for the Daily Nebraskan, will choose a new editor-in-chief and advertising manager at its 7:30 p.m. meeting Tuesday.

The eight voting members will pick between three editor candidates and two ad manager candidates to fill positions for next fall's editions.

Fulbright scholarship meetings set

Questions about applying for Fulbright-Hays scholarships can be answered Wednesday and Thursday at meetings organized by Roberto Esquenazi-Mayo, director of the UNL Institute for International Studies.

Esquenazi-Mayo, UNL Fulbright-Hays coordinator, said UNL students have a good record in winning the grants. Four UNL students are winners, finalists or alternates this year.

The Wednesday meeting is scheduled for 2:30 p.m. in Oldfather 204 and the Thursday meeting at 10:30 a.m. in Oldfather 305.

Students may apply for the scholarships from May 1 until Oct. 1. Winners are selected nationally. The scholarships provide transportation costs, tuition, fees and some expenses for education in almost every country, according to Esquenazi-Mayo.

Mary Lynn Tuck, working on her masters degree in German, has won a scholarship for next year to Germany.

Judith Martens and Evelyn Vinduska, May graduates have been named finalists in the competition and will be notified later if they have won.

Deborah Skoglund, who will receive her masters degree in August, has been named an alternate, and will not know until September if she will go to the south of France.

Legislature will discuss budget recommendation

Many Nebraska legislative bills are four or five pages long, but LB533 is thicker than most bills.

The 37-page proposal lists the suggested state fund appropriations for higher education agencies. The 1977-78 NU budget fills 10 pages. Waverly Sen. Jerome Warner, chairman of the appropriations committee, predicts senators will begin discussing the NU budget Wednesday.

Besides the NU budget, LB533 includes the budgets for the four state colleges, as well as aid to technical community colleges.

The state colleges are Peru, Kearney, Wayne and Chadron.

Today is the 68th day of the 90-day session. The senators have been discussing appropriations bills for the last week.

This year's tax returns are fattening what Warner has called a sparse state revenue.

"You can't spend money you don't have," he has said.

The Legislature's appropriations committee recommends NU be allotted some $100.6 million of state funds. The NU Board of Regents had requested some $111 million and Gov. J. James Exon suggested senators appropriate NU $100.8.
