

Squirrely . . .

This season is short-lived; within several weeks the new recruits learn the secrets of the trade and become more discreet members of the university community.

But until they break the code of playing it cool on campus and retire their high school letter jackets until their five-year class reunion, Joe Freshman provides enough amusement to ease the pain returning to the books. How is this unusual creature distinguished from the general campus population? Although every specimen is unique, some generalities can be drawn.

The days of selling elevator passes to unsuspecting freshmen may be obsolete, but it is still a common sight to see baffled freshmen frantically pushing the button to third floor Oldfather without realizing he needs a faculty key.

These wide-eyed teenagers are often seen wandering dazedly around campus with an air of forced self-assurance, while all the time their handy-dandy home-made campus map (yes, some even have aerial views!) is tucked discreetly between the covers of their brand new text books (all frosh buy texts just off the press).

Many freshmen seem to possess the herd instinct. Doves of whispering 180 year olds band together like a Blackshirt defensive front when crossing campus or making their hourly visit to the bathroom (commonly referred to in freshmanese as the john, head, can or salle de bain, but never the "bathroom.") Some freshmen are still so tightly attached to home that the apron strings are visible. They converge on campus with hand-written instructions from mom on how to do the laundry and make a daily vigil of calling home precisely at 11:01

p.m. (after the rates go down.)

Perhaps the most distinguishing characteristic of The Freshman is his unparalleled nerve. How does he ever get the guts, the seasoned upperclassman asks himself, to actually bring telescope into his dorm room to peer into the sixth floor room across the court?

But as these wise upperclassmen shake their heads in amazement at these extraordinary creatures, how can they forget the few short years ago when they too were giggling, bumbling frosh arriving at the Big U with visions of all-night kegers and their first date with a frat man dancing in their heads?
