

Students look to own assets in center's inventory

The UNL Counseling Center is taking inventories, but staff members are not counting supplies and cleaning closets.

The inventories are tests given to UNL students to assess their personal qualities, scholastic aptitude and mechanical skills.

There are more than 20 tests in all, said Dr. Vernon Williams, the center's director. Trained counselors help students decide which tests to take based on the information they are seeking.

With the test results counselors are better prepared to help students decide career goals and solve other problems, he said.

"We try to offer help with the life decisions a person makes in college," Williams said. These decisions may include marriage or divorce, whether to stay in school or drop out, or whether to remain living with a roommate.

Williams said the test results alone are not significant, but they do indicate how the counselor may help the student.

"An inventory is not a test of how well you can do but an attempt to get the best description we can of the person," Dr. Williams said.

No appointment is necessary at the center, located on the third floor of Seaton Hall, but there may be a short wait before one of the eight full-time counselors can see the student, he said.

Williams said most students average two visits: The first to meet with the counselor and decide what tests are appropriate and to take them. At a second meeting about 10 days later, the counselor and student discuss the results and set goals.

Counselors are not student advisors, he emphasized, and will not plan class schedules. However, they may make suggestions of new majors and career areas to explore.

Students can use the results when applying for jobs, and one test, the Minnesota Multiphasic Personal Inventory (MMPI) is required by some veterinary and graduate schools. It is not offered by the Placement Office.

Williams said no records will be released without the students written permission.

Staff's ledgers add ten

The names of 10 new faculty members are found on the staff ledgers in the College of Business Administration this semester.

Lester Digman as an associate professor of management will teach management sections. Digman received his Ph.D. in management and operations research from the University of Iowa in 1970.

Ira Dolich, professor and chairman of marketing, will teach marketing. He obtained a Ph.D. in business administration from the University of Texas in Austin in 1967.

Gary Green will teach three sections of Management 331. He was an assistant professor at Albers School of Business at Seattle University before coming to UNL to be an assistant professor of management. Green received his doctorate in operations management in 1976 from the University of Washington.

Thomas D. Hubbard, who obtained his Ph.D. from the University of Missouri in 1969, is a professor of accounting who will teach Accounting 313 and 411/811. He previously served as a professor of accounting at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University.

Justis added

Teaching sections of Management 335 and 434 will be Robert T. Justis who was an associate professor of management at Texas Technical University. He will supervise the development and administration of UNL's Small Business Institute.

Justis received his Ph.D. in business administration from Indiana University in 1972.

Sections of Management 360 and 960 will be taught by Mark J. Martinko, a visiting assistant professor in management. He received his Ph.D. at UNL in August.

Bronston (Tom) Mayes, a previous lecturer at Golden Gate University and California State University at Long Beach, will be an assistant professor of management teaching sections of management 360, 465 and 865.

He obtained a Ph.D. in organizations behavior from the University of California at Irvine in June.

Assistants added

Three other assistant professors are Richard M. Rehurek, James C. Schmidt and George W. Shute.

Rehurek received his M.A. in business administration in 1973 from UNL. He joins the faculty as a visiting assistant professor of accounting.

Schmidt, a visiting assistant professor in economics will teach sections of Economics 215 and 211. In May he received his M.A. and Ph.D. respectively in applied mathematical science and economics from Rice University, Houston.

Shute was an accounting administrator for the State of Nebraska before joining the staff. He is a visiting assistant professor of accounting who has a M.D. of arts in accounting from Ohio State University.
