

Guest artist will present sculpture class lectures

Environmental artist Andrew Leicester will be on the UNL campus Monday and Tuesday to present informal lectures, present a slide show and build a sand sculpture.

Sponsored by the Union Program Council, Leicester will work with UNL sculpture classes to construct a sand sculpture in the main lounge of the Nebraska Union Tuesday at 2:30 p.m.

He will lecture to sculpture classes in Richards Hall 113 Monday from 2:30 - 5:30 and Tuesday from 9:30 - 12:30. The lectures will be open to the public.

There will be a free informal slide lecture Tuesday at 7:30 p.m., in the main lounge of the Union. A photographic exhibition of Leicester's 'Alluvial Fan,' a water and sand sculpture, will be on display in the Union main lounge through Sept. 30.

The artist, born in England, received degrees in art design and sculpture. He came to the U.S. in 1970 and continued his schooling in numerous colleges and universities in Minnesota, his present home.

In 1974, Leicester received a great deal of notoriety for his sculpture work along a 30-mile section of U.S. Highway 52 between Hader and Rochester, Minn. He constructed six art pieces in hillsides by the highway. Travelers viewed them, and gave different interpretations of the work as they drove past.

Sky's the limit at observatory night

If you want the moon or the stars, they're yours Friday night.

The Behlen Observatory at the University of Nebraska Field Laboratory at Mead will be open to the public, free of charge Friday from 7 to 10 p.m.

Donald Taylor, UNL physics and astronomy instructor, said the "featured item" will probably be the full moon. If the weather is clear, observatory visitors will be able to look through the 30-inch telescope and a smaller 8-inch telescope, Taylor said.

Other sights might be the planets Uranus, Neptune and star clusters, he said.

Even if the weather is cloudy, the observatory will be open. A movie, Skylab Space Science Experiments, and a slide show will be presented regardless of sky conditions, said Taylor.

For additional information about the observatory, contact the physics dept. office, 264 Behlen Laboratory building, 472-2770.

Wind ensemble concert Sunday

The UNL Symphonic Wind Ensemble will perform eight American and British works in a free public concert Sunday.

Jack Snider, director of bands for the UNL School of Music, will conduct the group. He described the ensemble as "a small concert band made up of about 45 of the best wind and percussion players we have in the school."

Snider said members of the ensemble must audition and that most members are upperclassmen and graduate students—only two are freshmen.

The program begins at 4 p.m. in Kimball Recital Hall and includes four American compositions: "Sabre and Spurs" and "The Invincible Eagle" by John Philip Sousa, "Drammatico" by W. Francis McBeth and "American Folk Song Suite" by Arthur Frackenpohl.

The British pieces will be "Toccata Mariale" by R. Vaughan Williams, "Molly on the Shore" by Percy Grainger, "Pas Redouble" by Camille Saint-Saens, and a suite from the ballet Pineapple Poll by Arthur Sullivan.
