

'Spacewoman' . . .

She explained that much research can be done in a zero gravity environment that cannot be done on earth. The research includes medical research on hemophilia, chemical research to combine metals and produce alloys that cannot be produced on earth and psychological research on the human reaction to a zero gravity environment.

She added that the space program may rent shuttle space to various industries such as pharmaceutical, immunological and electronic companies in the future.

Sauerland said she is looking forward to the kind of medical research she may be doing on the shuttle.

She added that she has wanted to work in aerospace medicine since she went to medical school.

Sauerland, a mother of three, said she has wanted to be an astronaut since she was very young and thinks space is "the biggest challenge 20th century man can meet."

Sauerland, who spoke to a Women in Science Career symposium Tuesday night, said she never had the advantage of any programs or organizations that encouraged women to pursue careers in science when she was in college. She added that women in medical school when she was in school were looked on as a rarity.

Supporters sought for Civic Center

Citizens for the Civic Center are canvassing 90 voting precincts to educate Lincolnites about the Civic Center Bond issue, according to Civic Center Corporation Executive Director Art Thompson.

The bond issue election Nov. 8 would finance renovation of the old city hall and old federal building, Thompson said.

The two buildings would be joined by a performing arts theatre and the buildings would be used for city offices, he said.

The Civic Center Corporation, which owns the two buildings, will give them to the city if the bond issue passes.

If the bond issue fails and the corporation decides not to push for another bond issue, the city has an option to buy the buildings from the corporation for the purchase price of $695,000, Thompson said.

In that case, the money would be returned to the Woods Foundation and the NU Foundation, which donated money to the corporation to buy the buildings, he said.

Citizens for the Civic Center has two paid staff members and over 500 volunteers to distribute information about the bond issue in 90 of the 175 city precincts, Thompson said.

In addition to telephone canvassing and distributing brochures about the bond issue, Citizens for the Civic Center have a slide presentation, and they are planning an advertising campaign to educate voters about the bond issue, Thompson said.

Wrong time given

The Daily Nebraskan incorrectly reported Friday that Prof. Mary Ellen Rudin would speak today on mathematics at 10:30. She will speak at 11:30.

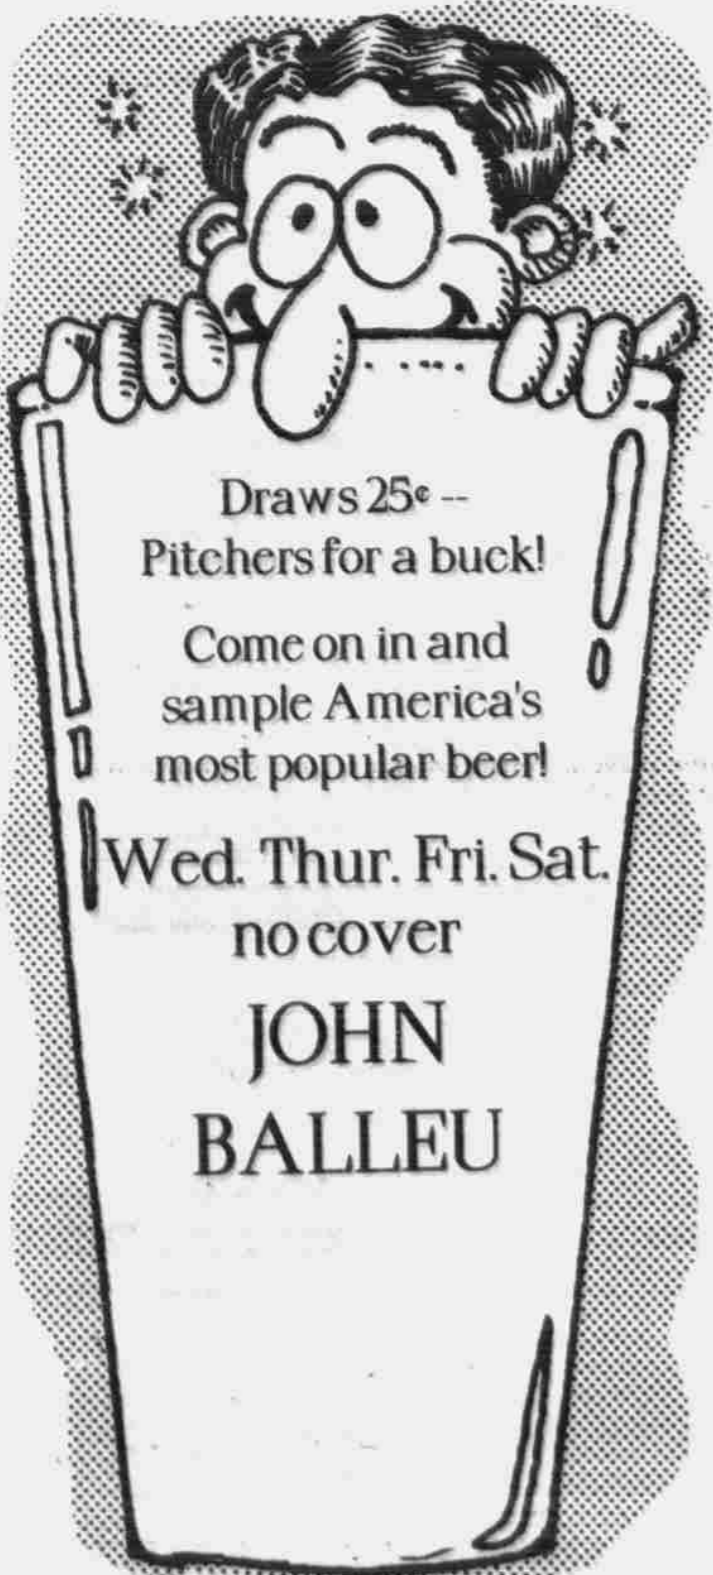

Also, the panel discussion scheduled for 8 p.m. has been moved to 7:30 p.m.

It also was incorrectly reported that 22 of 440 life science faculty members and 368 of 2,100 life science students were women. Those figures were for all science departments at UNL.

Anne Parkhurst is an assistant statistics professor at the biometrics center rather than the life sciences department.
