

Financial Aids office helps find jobs

Wanted: a few extra bucks a month, a chance to meet new faces, a little variation to the regular class and study schedule.

Announcement: available part-time jobs fulfill those requirements.

But where are they found?

The UNL financial aids office has initiated a new student job service program.

Only one month old, the service's purpose is to help students seeking employment know where the available jobs are located.

Donna Talkington, financial aids employment adviser, said the office does not screen students for the jobs.

Talkington said a bulletin board outside the financial aids office, room 113 in the administration bldg. lists the positions open.

Local businesses provide about one half of the listings, she said. Openings are also clipped from newspapers.

The new program is beneficial for both businesses and students, Talkington said. Businesses save classified advertising costs if they call the office and it is convenient for students to come to the office to find job openings, Talkington said.

The only students not able to use the service are work/study students, she said, because they often do not qualify.

There are also some internships available through the program, she said. There have been some insurance and child care jobs in the past, she said.

Talkington said students wanting full-time employment should let her know, so they can be alerted to possible positions.
