Co-ops share responsibility, provide lower-cost housing

With the holidays coming, thoughts may be turned toward home and the family. Students often may wish there were alternative life styles to the coldness of the residence halls and students in apartments may wish for a family to fill the loneliness.

Members of the campus cooperatives said these are exactly the advantages of living in a co-op.

Charles Pille, president of the Pioneer Co-op 1633 Q St. said he likes living in the family style arrangement the co-op offers. Everyone has responsibilities, which range from dishwashing to clean-up, he said.

Members of the Brown Palace, Inc. Co-op 1900 B St., also share responsibilities running the house. Most work details rotate every week, said Ron Phillips, house manager.

The student's class schedules are considered when making up the house duties, he said. The duties at the Brown Palace range from sweeping and mopping, to the usual dish duty, he said.

The Cornhusker Co-op 705 N. 23rd St. offers a bit more of the usual family life, since it is co-ed, said John Harris, treasurer of Cornhusker Co-op. The other two co-ops are all male.

Cornhusker Co-op has one floor for females and two for males, Harris said.

Eating and working with the girls is a great advantage to the life style offered at Cornhusker Co-op, he said.

Members of all three co-ops said the only hired help is a cook. All other operations of the houses are up to the members.

No house parents are around, so the responsibilities are on the members, they said.

But, before visions of the perfect living arrangement comes to mind, and the home away from home, (without parents), is planted in the reader's mind, one consideration is that the co-ops must abide by university rules.

Each house has its own set of visitation rules, set up with the university housing authority. Co-op members cannot have alcohol on the premises according to university policy though they are not on university property.

The co-ops make payments on their buildings, therefore, each member owns a share of the building while living there.

Another advantage to a co-op is low cost. Pille said expenses at the Pioneer co-op are nearly $400 less than those at a residence hall. This is because most of the cleaning work is done by the members, he said.

However, even with this extra cost, it is still cheaper than living in a residence hall, said Pille.

License to get face lift

In 1978, the old Nebraska driver's license will have a new face—yours.

After Jan. 1, all new and renewed Nebraska driver's licenses will carry a color photograph of the licensee in the lower left corner, bringing the state into line with several other states requiring photo identifications.

Other statistical information, such as height, weight, eye and hair color will remain on the license.

According to Georgia Lange, secretary to the chief driving examiner, licenses not scheduled for renewal in 1978 are valid until the license expires.

If the holder of an unexpired license wishes to get a license with his photograph on it. They may do so but a $2 fee will be charged, she said.

New licenses will be issued by the county treasurer for $7, a one dollar increase over the current fee.

The state law providing for the change was LB 90, proposed by Omaha Sen. Glenn Goodrich and approved by Governor J. James Exon on April 25, 1977.

Also on that date, Exon approved appropriations of $65,500 from the general fund to the Department of Motor Vehicles to carry out the new licensing.
