

Chairman denies charges

The chairman of the committee that considers nominations for distinguished teaching awards recently denied charges that the selection procedure lacked student input.

Donal Burns of the Faculty Committee on Instructional Development said such a charge was "ludicrous."

Burns said the Faculty Instructional Development Committee has five faculty members, one undergraduate student who is a member of the student advisory board to the College of Arts and Sciences, one graduate student and one associate college dean.

At least one faculty member has complained that the selection process was unfair.

"The committee will literally refuse to admit any candidate without student input," Burns said.

One way students have input is through teaching evaluations, Burns said. Students' evaluations for the past three years are an important part of the committee's decision, he said.

Award nominations are made by students, faculty members or alumni, he said.

According to a letter from Burns to the faculty, the first criteria for selecting nominees is the "quality of teaching and interaction with undergraduates and graduate students in the classroom as evidenced by student evaluations, exceptional performance by students, and letters from alumni."

All nominations require a cover letter, the nomination form and supporting evidence. Evidence includes the student, faculty and alumni evaluations.

Feb. 15 was the last day nominations were accepted. The awards will be presented April 14 at the UNL Honors Convocation.
