

Timberline keeping up 'the spirit' with new faces

By Casey McCabe

The members of Timberline enjoy playing their music, for both themselves and the audience. And the group says they hope the crowds will pick up on the good times they continually have on stage.

Keeping up that spirit is an admirable quality for the five piece band, which was on the road all but 35 days last year. But new members and new material has put new life in the band, which has been a Lincoln favorite for the past few years.

Bass player Scott Fauns has been with Timberline since New Year, while the March 16 performance of the band at Personalities was only the 12th show for keyboardist Ralph Goldhiem. Despite the newness of the situation, the members are confident of the groups present capabilities.

"We're having more fun with the new members than ever before," said rhythm guitarist and banjo picker Jim Salestrom. "Music-wise, I think we've become much better, the potential for the band is unlimited."

"There were good terms for the break-up with our old bass and piano players," added drummer Craig Link. "It was kind of a rare situation, but there are still nice feelings between members. When a band's on the road as much as we are, you become like a family. We realize that we're going to have to live with these people—you must be compatible. Six years down the road, we'll know each other completely."

Originated in Kearney by brothers Jim and Chuck Salestrom seven years ago, they were joined by Link two and a half years later. Doug Dougan, who had been producing Timberline's demo tapes, took up as the group's lead guitarist. The addition of Fauns and Goldhiem has created an extra demension, as both players add their own material to the group.

"We're still putting things together, but the band's really come together well," Link said. "We're excited about the new members, and the new directions the group's taking. It's going to be a little more rock, funk, and jazz than we've done before. We're getting away from country."

Timberline has established a reputation for being flexible in their musical styles. The band has even gained notoriety in the country circles, having toured with the likes of Michael Murphey, Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, Ozark Mountain Daredevils, and Dolly Parton.

"It was never our intention to be a country group," says Link. "After our album The Great Timber Rush, the major record labels started dropping their country groups unless they were really successful. Our label (Epic) even dropped Michael Murphey, they thought country was on the way out."

"They wanted us to change styles, but we thought it was a good idea too," he said. "The whole idea for the band has been to keep changing."

The people who become stars have always set the trends, they don't follow them," Fauns noted.

But the experience Timberline has gained working with various groups and people has helped the band create a quality they find highly desirable—and that is diversity.

"One distinguishing factor about the group is our ability to appeal to a variety of tastes. We can warm up almost any type of crowd," Link said. "I think the band will always be diverse. Any band if they play one style, will bore a crowd quickly. Right now we're heading for the high energy, rock sound."

"But we also were opening for Dolly Parton, and she draws the hard-core, Porter Waggoner-type crowd. We were always well received because of our knowledge of country music," he added.

The band recently has been playing in their home base of Denver to try to get the act together and concentrate on new material from Fauns and Goldhiem. But they hope to resume more extensive touring in the near future, and have a tentative tour set up with the Ozark Mountain Daredevils which would start in South Dakota and travel through outstate Nebraska and eventually play at the Orpheum Theater and Creighton University in Omaha.

Timberline has played in the college circuit all over the country, and according to the group, it has produced some of the most enjoyable performances.

"It's the ideal situation as far as we're concerned," says Link. "Nightclubs get old fast. People just come to drink and talk and listen to the band. But in our own concerts, they're coming to hear us. It's easier to form a line of communication."

"We don't just play with a wall between us," observed Salestrom. "We have fun with the audience, we have fun on stage. When you're spontaneous, it gives energy, it's important to have the energy flow out, and come back from the crowd."

"People see the band having a good time, and really pick up on it," Link said. "Playing our music is the most fun we have. If you don't have a good time, well, you ought to be doing something else."

50TH ANNUAL ACADEMY AWARDS

Bob Hope will serve as the sole master of ceremonies for the 50th Annual Academy Awards, which will be telecast live Monday, April 3, on ABC-TV.

The comedian's appearance will mark the first time since 1967 that one person has presided over an Oscar show. Hope, coincidentally, was the emcee at that time.

Hope was a unanimous choice because he has been more closely identified with Oscar than perhaps any other Hollywood celebrity. He has made 22 appearances on the awards, a record among filmhand personalities. He also has served as master of ceremonies 15 times, another record, and was the sole emcee on eight occasions. He first officiated at an Awards show in 1940. Through the years, Hope has been honored by the Academy five times.

The 50th Annual Academy Awards will be held at the Dorothy Chandler Pavilion of the Los Angeles Music Center.

HARVEY KORMAN SHOW

Harvey Korman stars as Harvey Kavanaugh, an egocentric character actor who hates a young man named Stuart... but not half as much as when he finds out Stuart and his daughter Maggie are living together in "The One Where Stuart Moves In," the premiere episode of ABC-TV's "The Harvey Korman Show," Tuesday, April 4.

Like all fathers, Kavanaugh thinks no man is good enough for his daughter. His paternal feelings are confirmed when he returns home a month early from an out-of-town acting job to find that Stuart has moved in.

Co-starring are Christine Lahti (pictured with Korman) as Maggie, Barry Van Dyke as Stuart and Milton Selzer as Jake.
