Administration could lose professor if Legislature gains a state senator

UNL will lose the services of professor Gene Harding if he is elected state senator, according to an opinion issued by John Gourlay, NU general counsel.

Gourlay said while Harding was a candidate, he would be governed by Section 3.9 of the Regent's Bylaws. It states that an employee of the university who considers running for public office must notify the chancellor and the division head of his college about his or her intention to run.

Harding, a journalism and secondary education professor, notified UNL chancellor Roy Young February 16. Neale Copple, UNL School of Journalism Director, also was notified of Harding's intention to run.

Young and Copple have allowed Harding to remain an instructor while a candidate as long as his campaign does not interfere with teaching duties.

The Nebraska Constitution prohibits state employees from receiving pay from another state office while they are serving in the Legislature, Gourlay said. They also cannot return to work or enter into a contract with the state until one year after the term's expiration.

Gourlay said the situation would not be altered if Harding were to take a leave of absence without pay.

Gourlay said he issued the opinion at Young's request.

Harding said the decision to run was a hard one because of the state prohibitions. "There will not be much opportunity to get the job back due to the tight job market," Harding said.

Although Harding said he can see the state's point of view that a state employee might try and legislate his own salary, he said the state law causes a hardship for state employees who run for office.

"It is hard for public employees to campaign because of the demands of their job and because the campaign is watched more closely so that no rules are violated," Harding said.

He referred to a proposal introduced last week in the Legislature by Sen. Howard Lamb of Anselmo which asked the regents to prohibit faculty members from using sick leave time for political campaigning.

Harding said he felt the proposal was directed at him because he is the only faculty member campaigning. He denied ever using sick leave for political campaigning.

The proposal is an example of how the activities of public employees are closely watched because of their visibility and accessibility, he said.

Harding said he did not mind Gourlay's ruling. "I entered into the candidacy knowing what the rules are and this is just accepting the responsibility."

Most graduates spend 2 to 5 years in their first job. . .
But most don't earn $13,035 to start or $21,313 a year within 4 years!!!!

Navy pilots and flight officers get that along with 4 weeks paid vacation, free medical and dental care, full pay with sick leave, expensive educational benefits and much more.

Prepare for that long sought after civilian job . . . get valuable "experience" in aviation and learn what the word "responsibility" means through the Navy's Flight Training Program.

Make it a point (and an appointment) to talk with Dick Sheets, Navy Aviation Information Officer.
