

Congressman calls farm bill a 'rotten election-year hoax'

Washington - The emergency farm aid package headed for voters in the Senate and House - and a presidential veto if it passes - is an election-year hoax, says a disgruntled congressman, designed to lay blame for farmer's troubles on the president.

The bill was approved Tuesday by conferees from the House and Senate, despite administration promises of a veto.

"It's an election issue, and it's rotten," said Rep. Frederick Richmond, D-N.Y., a dissenting member of the conference committee. "It's a hoax on the farmers that this will become law."

The congressmen said conferees approved the bill because "it cleans their skirts. They can blame it on the president."

"I'm disgusted," he added. "This is a disservice to the Democratic party and to the farmers."

Lead poisoning study

Washington - The government has spent seven years and nearly $9 million in research, but it still doesn't know how best to prevent children from poisoning themselves by eating lead based paint.

In 1971 and 1973, Congress ordered the Department of Housing and Urban Development to determine the nature and extent of the problem of lead-based paint poisoning the United States, particularly in urban areas, and the methods by which lead-based paint can be most effectively removed from . . . surfaces to which children may be commonly exposed."

A lengthy report obtained by The Associated Press concedes that HUD still doesn't know the nature and extent of the problem or how best to solve it. It recommends further study.

Royal ultimatum

London - Queen Elizabeth II has given her younger sister, Princess Margaret, a royal ultimatum: end her relationship with brewery heir and aspiring night club singer Roddy Llewellyn or withdraw from public life.

Buckingham Palace declined comment on the front-page report by the Sun newspaper.

"I wouldn't dream of contacting the royal family about private conversations," a palace spokesman said.

The Sun, quoting "a close friend of the royal family," said the queen was "deeply upset by criticism of the royal family because of the 47-year-old Margaret's friendship with Llewellyn, 17 years her junior.

Why is Coors sold in only part of the country?

Coors grew up as a regional brewery, at first supplying only Colorado with its now-famous brew. As the brewery increased in size, it transported its product to adjoining states. Today, Adolph Coors Company brews enough beer to sell in 14 states: Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Texas, Utah, Wyoming, Nebraska, and parts of Washington state. By mid-1978, the company will sell its beer in Iowa, Missouri and the remainder of Washington. As increased production and favorable market conditions permit, other states will be included in the market expansion.
