

Law building named after oil millionaire

The UNL College of Law building on East Campus will have a name soon because of action last Saturday by the NU Board of Regents.

The board voted unanimously to name the building after Ross McCollum, a California oil millionaire. McCollum has donated nearly $500,000 to the University of Nebraska Foundation's fund drive and has made a commitment to donate enough to complete a proposed addition to the college, according to John William Strong, law college dean.

Strong said a proposed laboratory courtroom will be built separately from the present building when money becomes available. The building will be named after Sherman Seymour Welpton Jr., a prominent California trial lawyer and McCollum's attorney.

Federal and state courts will be invited to the courtroom to hold sessions for students to observe, Strong said.

Welpton also has given money to the Law College. The Omaha native is a 1931 graduate of the NU law school. After graduation he practiced in Nebraska for 10 years and now is a senior partner in a Los Angeles law firm.

Editor announced

Senior journalism major, Carla Engstrom from Lincoln, has been chosen as the editor-in-chief of the Daily Nebraskan for the 1978 fall semester.

Carla Engstrom

Engstrom, 22, was chosen Tuesday night at a UNL Publications Board meeting. She has had two years experience at the Daily Nebraskan as an entertainment editor and reporter and is now the magazine editor.

Engstrom is a member of the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi.

The Lincoln East graduate plans "to keep emphasis of the paper on news and to continue good coverage.

"I'd like to expand the Fathom magazine section, maybe hire a full-time staff. I plan to keep a balance of coverage on both east campus and the main campus. I'd like to try to get more features for the Daily Nebraskan to liven up the paper.

After graduation, Engstrom plans to work at a metropolitan newspaper and eventually become an in-depth reporter and foreign correspondent.

ASUN to study research contract

The ASUN senate will consider a proposal tonight which would appropriate $1,000 to contract for research with the Nebraska University Public Interest Research Group.

Negotiations between the two groups began in February but broke down a few weeks later when Charles Fellingham, former ASUN vice-president, and Don Macke, NUPIRG director, could not agree on a contract.

Negotiations were resumed a few weeks ago between Macke and ASUN President Ken Marienau, according to Marienau.

The contract, which was approved Monday by NUPIRG's executive board of directors, was drafted by Student Legal Services Lawyer Bob Lange. It was amended by ASUN's Budget and Fees Committee, which drafted the appropriations bill going before the senate tonight.

The agreement would contract NUPIRG for ten weeks, from June 1 to August 15 at a rate of $100 a week. Research will cover landlord tenant laws, budget and tuition, and alcohol, according to the document.

Union Board to discuss space allocation

Nebraska Union space allocation proposals, including recommendations on the Nebraska University Public Interest Research Group and ASUN space requests for next year, will be discussed at today's Union Board meeting.

The Union Board allocates space for group meeting places, according to John Kreuzer, board secretary. NUPIRG recently has been criticized by the Young Americans for Freedom for its rent-free space on the first floor of the Union.

According to Kreuzer, ASUN has requested space on

UNL's rodeo team fares well in meets

Several UNL students placed in the money in double-barrelled rodeo action April 21-23.

University of Nebraska Rodeo Association cowboy Barry Johnson won the average in bareback bronc riding at the National College of Business in Rapid City, S.D., April 21 and 22 with a first-place finish in the preliminary round and a fourth-place tie in finals. The Merriman senior also tied for fifth in the event in a one-round rodeo April 22 and 23 at Chadron State College.

Johnson also placed fourth in the calf-roping averages and joined Kilgore sophomore Bill Peterson to take third in the team roping averages at Rapid City.

Also in team roping at Rapid City, Kilgore sophomore Mike Peterson combined with a woman student from North Dakota to take second in the averages.

At Chadron, Cody freshman James Marshall took first in steer wrestling.

In women's competition, four UNRA women finished in the money at the two rodeos. At Rapid City, Lincoln junior Karen Unterseher tied for second in the barrel racing averages, with first- and second-place finishes in the preliminary and final rounds. Unterseher also tied for third with Atkinson senior Cheryl White in the Chadron event.

Char Applegarth, a Whitman freshman, took fourth in breakaway roping at Chadron and fourth in the goat tying finals at Rapid City.

Valentine sophomore Patty Lutter took third in the breakaway roping preliminary round at Rapid City.

The meeting will begin at 7 tonight in the East Union Great Plains room. The agenda is:
