

Only scalpers could save visiting fans from end zone

By Buck Mahoney

Nebraska fans wanting 50-yard line seats at the Alabama game this weekend should have invested in Alabama season tickets or should count on an enterprising scalper.

Tickets provided to Nebraska fans are located in the corner of the end zone at the Birmingham stadium.

Alabama sent 4,000 tickets to the Nebraska ticket office, a large amount for a non-conference game, but approximately equal to the amount provided for Big Eight games, according to Helen Ruth Wagner, UNL ticket manager.

Nebraska returned about 1,700 unsold tickets earlier this month, also a large amount, she said.

"We don't usually return any," Wagner said.

The change of the date and the decision to televise the game may have been factors that led to the low sales, she said.

Visiting fans usually find their seats in the end zone, according to Wagner. Nebraska's tickets for the Iowa State game and other away conference games also will be in the end zone.

Tickets that are issued Nebraska's opponents are for corners or end zone sections of Memorial Stadium.

"I think everybody is on the same basis," Wagner said. "We can't give anyone a fifty-yard line east stadium seat because that is where our students sit."

Most Lincoln travel agencies report that response to the game was not as high as expected. One agency cancelled their tour when they learned the game would be televised.

Although some space still is available, most tours are closed because the travel agencies had to make reservations for their tours.

Tours varied between two and four nights and between $250 and $500. All tours supplied tickets to the game. Most of the tours' tickets came from the Nebraska ticket office and are end zone seats.
