

Parking lot 20 to open this week

The 300 parking spaces closed during the resurfacing of lot 20, north of the Dental College, should be available again at the end of this week.

Capt. Kenneth Markle, of University Police, said the blacktopping of the rock parking lot should have begun in May, but was delayed until two weeks ago.

Harley Schrader, director of the Physical Plant, said the late start shouldn't cause any parking problems because there are plenty of extra lots. A check into funds available for the project and the contractor's schedule were the main reasons for the postponement. Designing of the lot also takes time, Schrader said.

Students have been asked to temporarily park in area 25 by Baker Hall and on the Campus Loop.

Markle said the Parking Advisory Department recommends which lots need repair and the chancellor of business and finance approves the decision. The price of resurfacing the lot is not yet known, but UNL is paying $20 a ton for blacktop, Schrader said.

Other lots to be resurfaced this fall are those adjacent to the Plant-Science Lab and the lot on 18th and Q Streets. A lot on 21st and Vine streets will be rocked this fall instead of resurfaced.

UNL dismisses

While students enjoy a four-day weekend this Labor Day, university office employees will have only three days for vacation. All university offices will be open Tuesday. Football tickets will be available to those who purchased them last spring Tuesday through Friday. Pick-up for lottery tickets will be Wednesday.

University receives government grant

UNL will receive about $165,000 from the federal government.

Most of the sum, $89,719, will be given to UNL by the U.S. Office of Education to provide special services to disadvantaged students who are economically disadvantaged, educationally deprived or culturally different.

UNL estimates there are 6,800 such students now on campus, and hopes to reach 200-400 of them this year with career planning help and academic skill instruction.

The Environmental Protection Agency will give $21,000 to the UNL Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources. The money will enable the institute to make available, on computer terminals at the agricultural extension service offices and state offices, information about which pesticides have been approved by the EPA for special use. It also will pay for a survey of pesticide use in rural and urban areas.

An extra $55,700 has been granted to James A. Sampson, by the National Science Foundation. Sampson, a professor with the UNL physics department, will investigate the interreaction between solar radiation with planetary atmospheres.

Engineering teacher given science grant

The National Science Foundation has granted Professor Pau-Chang Lu of UNL mechanical engineering department $18,544 for thermal energy research.

Lu said thermal energy is a major feasible source of energy that has been used throughout history.

"The grant will be used to study numerically the temperature in porous material when the mass rate is being changed," said Lu. "The study will help in the design of various apparatus to store and convert thermal energy," he added.

Lu plans to stay on the UNL campus and continue to teach while conducting the 12-month study.

The grant provides money for a graduate assistant, according to Lu.
