

RHA proposes 24-hour visitation on two Selleck floors

By Kim Wilt

An "open visitation option" proposed by the Residence Hall Association would be an "opportunity for students to set up rules that they'll have to learn to live with," RHA president Bill Skoneki told Council on Student Life members last night.

Speaking at a special meeting called by CSL Chairman John Benson to discuss the proposal, Skoneki said students "have to set their own rules, they need to be self-regulating."

The proposal would allow visitation up to 24 hours on floors 7200 and 7300 of Selleck Quadrangle for a one and one half year trial.

If the proposal is approved by the NU Board of Regents, students on both floors will vote on whether they want the option. If the vote is unanimous, and if residents less than 19 years old get parental consent, the option will go into effect the second semester of the 1978-79 school year.

If the vote is not unanimous, or parental consent is not obtained, the option will take effect in the fall semester of the 1979-80 school year.

Housing Director Doug Zatechka said that his office has not studied the proposals completely, but they were looking at other universities of similar size and complexity, "to see how they've dealt with it."

Zatechka said he wanted to make sure that those students who wanted a "more regulated environment" would be given a way to deal with the open visitation option.

He proposed a "roommate contract" in which roommates would decide issues such as when members of the opposite sex would be in the room.

CSL approved a motion that it sent a letter to NU President Ronald Roskens, Executive Vice President Steven Sample, UNL Chancellor Roy Young and Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Richard Armstrong, alerting them of the development of the proposal, and encouraging them to take what ever action they felt was appropriate.

In other actions, CSL approved the nomination of four students to the Publications Board.

John Kreusher, Mark Bower, Mark Schmiederskamp and Clark Ackerman were approved unanimously as members of the board.

One more opening on the board exists, which Benson said would be filled when someone applied.

Publications Board considers changes

By Martha Murdock

The Publication Board, which sets policy for the Daily Nebraskan, met Thursday evening and discussed changing publication policy for the newspaper.

Daily Nebraskan Editor Carla Engstrom said the newspaper is confused with the Journalism School's Summer Nebraskan. Advertisers confuse the two publications, and the university sends Summer Nebraskan mail to the Daily Nebraskan.

Engstrom suggested that either the Journalism School change the name of their paper or cease publication and turn over summer production to the Daily Nebraskan. The board unanimously voted to investigate the possibility of a summer publication called the Weekly Nebraskan.

"The summer paper would give students experience working on a weekly. It would have academic value," said Engstrom. The board tried to set up summer production by the Daily Nebraskan one and a half years ago.

The board also discussed the possibility of publishing the Daily Nebraskan five days a week instead of four days a week.

"We'd really be the Daily Nebraskan," said the editor, "which would be tremendous."

An advertising class took a survey and found that 80 percent of UNL students would favor seeing the paper come out on Tuesdays, according to Engstrom.

Several board members emphasized that the paper would need more office space to comfortably publish one more day.

The newspaper's business manager, Jerri Haussler, said that in the last few years, "the staff has grown from 35 people to 130 people, but we're still working with the same equipment and space."

The board discussed the addition of wire service coverage to help fill the additional pages per week.

Board members agreed that this year's Publication Board will make major decision about the paper's future.

Advertising manager Denise Jordan said that the paper must consider its own growth. "There are a lot of people down there on the staff who are excited about this newspaper," said Haussler.

Clocks lose hour, sleep in Sunday

This is the weekend students can catch an extra hour of sleep that they lost during the midterms by turning the clock back one hour Saturday night.

A federal law, administered by the Transportation Department, specifies that daylight-saving time applies from 2 a.m. on the last Sunday in April until 2 a.m. on the last Sunday in October in areas that do not exempt themselves.

The idea originated in Great Britain during World I as an economic measure. It was adopted in the United States in 1918, but was repealed one year later. It was incorporated again after World War II, at the discretion of the individual states and cities.
