

Strikers slow Iran's oil exports and threaten economy

Tehran, Iran—A strike by more than 37,000 refinery workers threatened Tuesday to strangle Iran's petroleum exports of 5 million barrels a day, but the government said it has been able so far to maintain 60 percent of its export quota.

Information Minister Mohammed Reza Ameli-Tehran said the strike caused a 40 percent cutback in exports. Another government source declined to say how the government managed to get the oil out of the country.

Prime Minister Jaagar Sharif-Emani told parliament the nation faces "dangerous problems" because of the walkout.

Sharif-Emani told the lower house of the Iranian parliament the nation will lose $60 million every day the strike lasts. Tanks and armored vehicles patrolled the capital and several hundred soldiers surrounded the Mahlis, or parliament, as he spoke.

An off-and-on strike by workers at Abadan in southern Iran slowed oil exports last week, but when those workers and others automated terminals at Khard Island, Bandar-Shahpour and Bandar-Mahshar walked off Tuesday, all spigots were closed, authorities said.

Oil sales pump $22 billion annually in Iran's coffers and are the nation's economic mainstay.

Heavy fighting

Dar Es Salaam, Tanzania—Tanzania, which had been scoffing at Ugandan claims that Tanzania forces had invaded Uganda, said Tuesday it has rushed troops to its northern border to repel an invasion by the Ugandans in areas along the western shore of Lake Victoria.

Government sources said there was "heavy fighting" around the Tanzanian town of Bukoba, five miles south of the border and about 650 miles east of Dar Es Salaam, following an invasion Monday.

Reports of the fighting could not be confirmed independently.

Kenya called for a cease-fire and withdrawal of troops from the border area and offered to mediate the dispute.

Sources in the Ugandan exile community in Nairobi, capital of neighboring Kenya, said about 200 wounded Ugandan soldiers arrived at the Makine police barracks at Kampala, the Ugandan capital, Tuesday morning aboard 10 helicopters.

The sources said the Ugandan air force was launching air strikes in support of their troops, but further details were not disclosed.

Western diplomatic sources in Dar Es Salaam said Western nationals trapped in the reported battle area were being evacuated to safety. First to leave were 45

Swedish missionaries, they said. And another 20 Dutch citizens were reported to have left the Bukoba area.

There was no word about the fate of 16 Americans and 27 Canadians believed living near the battle zone. The 16 Americans, diplomatic sources said, include 11 missionaries and five members of an archeological team from Brown University.

A military spokesman, in a Uganda radio broadcast Monday, said Ugandan military units had inflicted "heavy casualties" on attacking Tanzanian soldiers who purportedly crossed the border and invaded southern Uganda Friday.

The spokesman claimed the fighting Monday was the "hottest" since Tanzanian troops invaded with Cuban backing.

Meanwhile, thousands of protesters staged anti-government demonstrations in at least two Iranian cities, but no injuries were reported.

Iran is a major supplier of oil to the United States. In Washington, energy officials said it was too early to determine what impact the strike will have on the United States.

Warning given in beer matter

University Police Friday night confiscated 2 six-packs of beer from the Daily Nebraskan office after receiving a report of persons consuming alcohol.

According to the report, the persons in the newsroom were warned about consuming alcohol on state property, but there were no arrests.

Police were reportedly tipped off to the incident by a student security officer, who also is employed by the Daily Nebraskan.
