Carter's three vetoes fulfill his anti-inflationary promises

Washington— President Carter raised the ire of farmers, textile marketers and student nurses Saturday by vetoing three bills, signaling once more his determination to curb inflation.

In a series of actions aimed at controlling inflation, Carter also announced plans to keep feed-grain prices from increasing by more than approximately five percent in the next two years.

The president's moves came well ahead of a midnight deadline for vetoing legislation enacted by the 95th Congress, which adjourned Oct. 15 at the end of an around-the-clock lawmaking weekend. The actions finally cleared Carter's desk of pending bills.

The White House announced that Carter had vetoed:

—A bill that would have restricted his ability to permit imports of cheap foreign beef.

—A measure that would have forbidden him to lower tariffs on imported textiles.

—A bill authorizing spending "far in excess" of that requested by the administration for student-nurse training.

Carter also decided against imposing tighter production controls on already abundant supplies of corn and other feed grains, an action projected to lead to an average increase in corn prices of about one percent by next October and 4.4 percent in the year after that, given normal weather.

Paraquat pot hazard

Washington— Eight months after HEW

Secretary Joseph Califano touched off concern over paraquat-contaminated marijuana, a federal drug agency has toned down its estimate of the hazard posed to heavy marijuana smokers.

The heavy users still could run a risk of permanent lung damage from smoking Mexican marijuana tainted by the tasteless, odorless, colorless but poisonous herbicide, according to a final report released by the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

The institute fixed the danger level at five marijuana cigarettes daily for a year with 500 parts per million of paraquat. It makes no mention of risk for occasional smokers.

The institute, an agency within the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, had said in its preliminary report last March that the danger existed for anyone who for several months smoked three to five joints daily containing 450 parts per million of paraquat.

It also indicated in its preliminary report that there could be a risk for those who smoked less often or fewer contaminated joints.

In its final report, the institute also warned that pot smokers have more to worry about than just paraquat contamination.

The institute said regular marijuana smoke contains more cancer causing agents than tobacco smoke. It cited a recent study that found chronic marijuana smokers—those who smoke five or more joints a day— had less ability to exhale air that those who smoked 16 or more cigarettes a day.

The recent study said tars from marijuana smoke were shown to produce tumors in laboratory-tested animals.
