Group's goal is to ease emergencies

When the need arises for first aid, fire clean-up or a search party, the Campus Red Cross and Assistance Team may be the group to contact.

UNL student John Courtright started the program in October 1977.

Courtright said he worked in a Search and Rescue Group in New Mexico, on which most of the UNL format is based. However, they receive their supplies and supervision from the American Red Cross.

"One of our future goals is to set up a search team for missing persons," Courtright said.

In the past, the Campus Red Cross and Assistance Team has cleaned up after fires and responded to emergency calls. They respond to red codes; emergency, blue codes; missing person, and yellow codes; fire clean up.

The ten-member team, is located on East Campus in Burr Hall, Courtright said.

"We are not replacing the Health Aides (in the residence halls), we're here to help them out in situations in which they are not fully equipped to handle,"

The team has its own equipment including blankets and splints, which, he said, is more than what the Health Aides have.

"Dr. Armstrong, vice chancellor of affairs, is in full support of our program," Courtright said. "We are still new and trying to become recognized as a valid team is important to us."

"Any willing person is allowed to be on the team, it's completely volunteer."
