

Union Board considers changes in Union services

By Denise Smee

The Nebraska Union Board Wednesday discussed issues raised in the Touche-Ross report, the fund "B" report and other reports from union management.

The issues discussed involved: elimination or restructuring rates for catering outside of the unions such as to the Faculty Club, or to the chancellor's or university president's residence; elimination or rate restructure of fund-raising events held at the union especially those involving food service; building hour changes and eliminating the Colonial Room.

Nebraska Union Director Allen Bennett said catering to places outside of the union started as a courtesy, but it has grown, he said, and is a business with a dollar volume of over $70,000.

"Any mispricing in that is significant," he said.

Though pricing for direct costs such as food can easily be done, he said, it has been difficult to determine indirect costs such as wear and tear on union dishes and utensils as well as costs of salaried help in planning the events.

Board member, Dr. John Janovy said he did not think that anyone was trying to criticize the activity, especially in the case of catered events at the president's or chancellor's residences, but said it is time to look at the real costs incurred.

Bennett said there is a need to do something about fund-raising events because it is a drain on union employees.

"They're dead on their feet come Monday morning," he said.

Daryl Swanson, associate director and Nebraska East Union manager, said currently groups are assessed a $100 fee for having a fund-raising activity in the union.

But, he said, this does not cover the costs involved in providing a supervised kitchen as required by state health standards.

Swanson also said there were problems with closing the union more often or keeping it open all the time.

Currently, he said, the union is open 110 to 120 hours a week.

Bennett said he agreed with the Touche-Ross report which said the Colonial Room is probably the least productive and most costly feature of the Nebraska Union.

Board Vice President Vance Colling said he thought the Colonial Room should be eliminated because it does not serve a significant number of those supporting the union with student fees.

In other business, Secretary John Kreuscher said ASUN will interview applicants for eight board positions Dec. 11, 12 and 13.
