

Investigators disprove elevator uproar

A UNL police investigation has proved that a supposed Pound Hall elevator crash on Tuesday had been blown out of proportion.

What happened was this: the west elevator in Pound, which was empty, began traveling up and down the elevator shaft when a sector cable malfunctioned. That cable does not support the elevator, but merely determines what floor the elevator stops on. As the elevator reached the 13th floor, it produced a grinding noise and kicked up a lot of dust simply because it normally doesn't go to the 13th floor. However, the girls in the adjacent elevator didn't know that.

When they heard the grinding noise and saw the dust, they thought their elevator was going to crash and began screaming. When the people in the hallway outside the elevator shafts saw the dust, heard the grinding noise and the screaming, they also thought an elevator was going to crash.

They made some phone calls and a squad car, fire engine and an ambulance was dispatched to the scene. The girls in the elevator reportedly were pretty upset, but police now insist that both elevators were completely safe and there was no chance that either of them could have crashed.

Enlist now. Relax. Go later.

It's called the Delayed Entry Program, and it's the best way to get what you want out of the Army. The best way to get the skill training you want. The best way to serve where you want to serve. If you qualify, you sign up now. Then sit back and relax, waiting up to 365 days for the training you really want - whether it's in medicine, law enforcement, personnel, or whatever. Enlisting now and going later also lets you pick Hawaii, Korea, Alaska, the Canal Zone, Europe or almost anywhere in the continental U.S.A. to serve your country. While you're counting the days, you can let your hair grow, lie on the beach, play your records, kiss that special person good-bye. The Delayed Entry Program. It gives you time to do a lot of planning.
