Sentence omitted

Due to a production error, one line of type was omitted from a letter to the editor entitled "Garbage Clarification," which was in the March 1 Daily Nebraskan.

The letter, written by Robert Lange of the Student Legal Services Center, clarified a landlord's obligation to provide for garbage disposal unless the tenant agrees, in writing, to assume this responsibility.

The sentence was inadvertently changed to "That is, if the tenant would remain with the landlord." It should have read "That is; if the tenant has not expressly agreed to assume responsibilities of garbage removal, such duties would remain with the landlord."

So take stock in your country. Buy U.S. Savings Bonds.

When you need dough, they rise to the occasion.

Series E Bonds pay 6% interest when held to maturity of 5 years (4½% the first year). Interest is not subject to state or local income taxes, and federal tax may be deferred until redemption.
