Official: nuclear threat ends but repercussions still exist

Harrisburg, Pa.—Gov. Dick Thornburgh declared an end Wednesday to the threat of "immediate catastrophe" in the nation's most serious nuclear accident, but authorities still waited for Three Mile Island's disabled reactor core to reach a cold shutdown.

Only then, they said, would they declare all danger past.

"We can heave a sigh of relief," Thornburgh said on NBC's Today show.

a similar report Sunday.

The New York Times said officials of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission estimate that it could be four years before the crippled plant is decontaminated, overhauled and placed back on line.

And the Washington Post said nuclear experts likened the cleanup operation to scrubbing a highly radioactive ring out of a giant bathtub and said it would cost at least $40 million.

But first, the technicians must cool down the reactor.

"The threat of any immediate catastrophe is over," he said. "Now we must face up to the long-term consequences of this event—we have serious public health problems, environmental problems and economic problems to grapple with."

The governor continued his advisory that pregnant women and young children stay at least five miles from Three Mile Island, and federal officials say there remains the slight risk of trouble.

Meanwhile, there were reports that last Wednesday's accident may have been the result of human error and that the cleanup may take several years and cost up to $40 million.

The Chicago Tribune said the breakdown has been traced to a backup cooling system valve that was inadvertently left closed several days before the accident. The Allentown, (Pa.) Call Chronicle carried

New York—New studies in 21 countries show that the death rate of women from heart disease has actually declined rather than risen in recent years as had been expected because of the use of birth control pills.

The reports issues Tuesday said the new findings challenge previous conclusions of British studies that said women who use oral contraceptives are about four times more likely to die of cardiovascular disease.

"Analysis of U.S. mortality statistics shows that since adoption of the pill, deaths among women of reproductive age from cardiovascular diseases have declined much more rapidly than have death rates of comparable men. This suggests that the high level of risk of death from such diseases associated with pill use in other studies are exaggerated," said Dr. Christopher Tietze, who wrote one of the reports.
