After reading the various articles concerning the black woman being added to the UNL Yell Squad, it really concerns me to think that some people have no respect for the leaders of the school and how they're chosen.

As a cheerleading instructor with the University Cheerleading Association for the past three years, I have had the opportunity to teach some of the most talented College Cheerleading Squads in the nation. Colleges such as Arkansas, Alabama, Florida, Auburn and L.S.U. select their members in the same fashion as UNL has done. And yes, many of these squads have black members, but they too had to meet certain requirements to make the squad like any other member. I can see why the UNL Squad would be upset after they had worked hard all year to make the squad and then a person is appointed to be a member.

The golf or tennis teams may not have a black member but they aren't going to go out and appoint someone to the team for the lack of minority representation. Even though there were controversies over the decision, Bob Devaney's statement that the black woman be an alternate for the '79 Yell Squad should settle the dispute for now. But because she is an alternate this year, she should still be required to meet the criteria to become a member of the squad next year.

I feel for the Yell Squad members for the position they have been in since the adding of the additional member. I know how much work goes into preparation for the football season and I can see where an additional member would have trouble learning the new material. I also regret the fact that the black woman involved has been put in such a bad position.

The Daily Nebraskan welcomes letters to the editor and guest opinions. Timeliness, clarity of writings and originality are considered when selecting material for publication.

Material should be typed if possible and submitted with the writer's name, class standing, academic major or occupation, address and phone number.

In closing, I think some people have presented poor taste in describing the leaders of our school spirit as "half-crazed white girls who exploit their sexuality and dignity for no apparent reason" (Guest Opinions, Sept. 6 issue). Without such leadership as shown by our entire Yell Squad, where would the Nebraska school spirit originate and who would lead us as we shout "HUSKER POWER!"?

Color makes difference

With the recent insertion of a black member into the up someone from the opposite sex. This is like a fine art museum. Everybody gets the great works of art, but they'd really like to have a Rembrandt of their own at home.

- How about the ink that rubs off on your hands after reading the Daily Nebraskan?

Some need little explanation.

- Channel 10/11 News with or without Mark Ahmann.

- People who hate the Greek system. People who hate the residence hall system. People who hate.

- Pictures of Bob Devaney that are larger than pictures of religious figures.

- The New York Yankees.

- Amy Carter.

The list could go on and on. I wanted to try and save the best until last. Maybe I did.

What really peeves me off the most, what really bothers me to no end is when columnists sit down and write out all their pet peeves.

How's that for objective journalism?

ranks of the yell squad members, we can now tell that color does make a difference.

It's too bad that the 100 or so girls who tried out this spring, and especially the final 10, find out in this manner that skill and discipline meant relatively little in the selection process. In a prejudiced world, the best is not always the best.

- People who don't like Woody Allen or his movies. I think Allen is one of the few geniuses in the world today. Of course I wouldn't rate my opinion of geniuses too high. Like the saying goes, "It takes one to know one." Looks like I'm outta luck.

- People who talk sports all the time. I can see it now. The Soviet Union is attacking the United States. The guy who talks sports all the time looks up from the sports page. "I hope they get the doubleheader between the Pirates and the Cubs in," he says.

- People from home who write me letters that start with "How are things out in the cornfields?" It is next to impossible to explain to my friends from suburban Illinois that I don't need a machete to get around on the UNL campus.

- Students who take pud classes to boost their almighty grade point average. Philosophy of religion students, please note.

- And what about people who go to the bars to pick
