Study: Chrysler close could hurt cities

WASHINGTON (AP)—A shutdown of the financially troubled Chrysler Corp. would have an enormous effect on the U.S. economy and result in long-lasting damage to several metropolitan areas, says a study by the Department of Transportation.

The draft study, released today by Sen. Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., also concluded that the demise of Chrysler would deprive the United States of an estimated 800,000 small, fuel-saving cars by 1981. "This would lower the potential for fuel savings derived from new fleet sales each year," it said.

The document said a shutdown could result in a severe depression in the Detroit area, raising unemployment from today's 8.7-percent rate to as high as 19 percent of the labor force there.

The study was made by the department's Transportation Systems Center and forwarded to the Treasury Department in connection with Chrysler's appeal for federal assistance. The firm lost $207 million in this year's second quarter alone.

The study concluded that if Chrysler closed operations, 97,000 U.S. production workers would lose their jobs, at least for the time being, along with 15,000 in Canada and 7,500 in Mexico.

Another 180,000 employees of firms that supply parts to Chrysler would be thrown out of work, along with 100,000 employees of dealers and 12,000 who work in freight and related areas.

In the worst case—shutdown with no immediate takeover of Chrysler facilities or employees by other companies—would require governments to spend another $1.5 billion a year for unemployment assistance, plus welfare payments for as many as one million family members.

"It is doubtful that local coffers could support this level of payment," the study said.

Losses of income taxes alone would amount to $500 million, in addition to reductions in sales and property taxes, it said. For the U.S. economy as a whole, the shutdown would bring an increase of about $1.5 billion a year in imported cars, it added.
