Football up for auction

A political football complete with signatures of several Nebraska elected officials, Omaha Sen. Ernie Chambers' T-shirts and lunch with Sen. Peter Hoagland of Omaha, are among the political paraphernalia to be sold to the highest bidder at the Common Cause auction Saturday evening.

According to Common Cause Executive Director Clay Statmore, the GBR auction does not stand for "Go Big Red." The auction is named "Go for Better Representation" and is used to raise money for the organization.

Common Cause, which has more than 700 members in Nebraska, is a national citizens' lobby which works for open and responsive government, Statmore said. All proceeds from the auction will be used to support the state Common Cause program, he said.

More than 60 items will be auctioned off, but the highlight item is the political football, he said.

The auction is open to the public and will begin at 7 p.m. in the basement of the Aka Tiki Lounge, 5200 O St.

After Big Red—big garbage

More than 300 man hours are required to cleanup the campus after every Saturday football game, according to people involved in the cleanup.

It takes until Wednesday to get the stadium cleaned, Bill Shepard said. Shepard is the groundskeeper for the athletic department.

Shepard said that after the first home game, maintenance filled a 20-cubic-yard container with garbage.

To clean the football stadium after one game costs the athletic department about $1,500. In addition, cleaning the rest of the grounds after the game costs the Grounds Department an additional $500 for every game, Jay Schluckebier, assistant director of the Grounds Department, said.

When the sun rises the morning after a football game, 25 to 30 members of the Pershing Rifles Company can be seen picking up the stadium trash by hand. They work until all of the large trash is picked up.

Shepard said they can tell how well the snack bar does during the game. He said the type of trash depends on the temperature and the degree of excitement of the football game. When it is warm more beverages than food are consumed while in cold weather the opposite is true.

On Monday and Tuesday employees blow the trash from the top rows to the bottom with blowers that are worn like a backpack. On the third day, the trash at the bottom is picked up by hand.

In closing Shepard said, "put the paper in your pocket and take it home with you."
