Student loan applications increase

Federal insured student loan applications at UNL have increased from 2,550 last year to 3,500 for the first three months of this year.

Don Aripoli, director of financial aid, said the number of applications for student grants and work-study programs also has increased.

"One of the reasons for the increase in applications is the awareness of the students that they are eligible for the federal loans no matter what their financial status," Aripoli said.

The increase in applications also has increased the office's amount of paperwork. The increase in paperwork has made it difficult to help the student as quickly as the financial aid office would like to.

"If the student's problem is an emergency we will help them immediately. But if, for example, you need the money problems they may have. "The last thing a student November to discuss the application," Aripoli added.

He said that anyone coming into the financial aids office should expect to wait two to three days for an appointment if there is no immediate need for money.

"Our main job is to help the student, but it isn't fair to the student who put in his application last week to leave his application set while we help someone who just walked in," he added.

Besides giving the students loans, the financial aids office also helps with the students budget and other money problems they may have. "The last thing a student should have to worry about when he is going to school is if the bills are getting paid," Aripoli said.
