The Daily Nebraskan incorrectly printed a headline on Monday that read "Big Eight council passes Pan-Africanism proposal." The headline should have read "Big Eight Council fails Pan-Africanism resolution."

The resolution, which received the majority of debate at a Big Eight black student government council meeting this weekend, was proposed by the NU delegation.

According to Hubert Brown, parliamentarian for the council, the argument supporting the Pan-Africanism resolution was to adopt the term and its ideas to the Big Eight black student government groups.

The term of Pan Africanism, according to the pro-argument, generally means a total unification of all black peoples throughout the world, not only American blacks.

The opposing side said that the word Pan Africanism implies more than world unification. Arguments against the resolution said the word would sever black students from administrations and other students on their campuses, and diminish the efforts black students have fought for.
