

UNL has first J.V. basketball team in four years

By Ron Powell

For the first time since the 1975-1976 season, UNL will have a junior varsity basketball team.

The team will consist of a few varsity players and 12 walk-on players, according to junior varsity coach John Hammond.

"The team was basically set up for the varsity players who are not seeing playing time with the varsity, and need experience," Hammond said.

Hammond said the team will usually carry 15 players, but that the number of varsity players will determine how many walk-ons will suit up for a game. "Some games there could be more than three players come down from the varsity," Hammond said. "I have no say on who comes down to play for us. It's all determined by the varsity."

Most of the walk-ons, Hammond said, have had previous basketball experience from high school, but most of them had not planned to play college basketball.

"I am really happy to see these kids have an opportunity to play some more organized basketball after high school," Hammond said. "It gives them a chance to get some exercise and break away from school for a while. We stress to our players, though, that school comes before basketball."

THE TEAM has been practicing for more than two weeks in preparation for their first game against the Salem Oilers, a Lincoln AAU team. The game will be the preliminary contest to the varsity's exhibition contest against Windsor, Ont.

"The first game should be an interesting one," Hammond said. "It scares me to play an AAU team because you're playing against 24 or 25-year-old men who probably already have college experience. But we might be more organized than they are and in better condition."

He said the team has a 13-game schedule, and that he was working on extending it to a 15-game schedule. He added, however, that some schools could cancel.

"WE HAD A home-and-home series scheduled with Kansas State, but they canceled for unknown reasons," Hammond said. Kansas State is the only other Big Eight school with a jayvee program.

Hammond said the jayvees will run the same type of offense and defense as the varsity, but on a simpler scale.

"We run the same type of things because when the scholarship players come down, they will be able to fit right in," Hammond said. The varsity players who will play on the jayvee team practice with the varsity, Hammond added.

Hammond says he has been pleased with the team's progress this season.

"Even though they are walk-ons, they all have basketball experience and that helps," Hammond said. "What makes it tough is when the scholarship players come down, some of those walk-ons that have worked hard in practice might have to sit out in the games."

Hammond said that if the jayvee program is successful, there could be walk-on recruiting for the jayvee team much like the football team's. He added, however, that with the 15 scholarship limit and the freshman eligibility rule, it is hard to establish a successful jayvee team.
