USED organizer calls student rally a success

By Gordon Johnson

A USED student rally in front of the Nebraska Union Friday morning was a success and played a major role in getting the regents to approve student fee financing of controversial speakers, said rally organizer Tim Rinne.

The rally, sponsored by University Students for Educational Development, focused its attention on the financial problems of the University as well as the administration's unwillingness to listen to students. Students gave skits on the NU-Board of Regents and still others, including instructors, told the crowd what the university needed in the way of leadership and funding.

"I recommend you go to a carnival this afternoon..." Rinne said. One can see the Regents acting with all the pomp of a carnival and deciding issues for the university without the interests of the students at heart, Rinne said.

The crowd of spectators, which cheered on the rally's actors and orators, grew to about 200 students.

One of the main problems with the regents and administration, Rinne said, is that they know most students are here for only four years. With that kind of a turnover, they don't have to worry about a large number of students becoming actively interested in the operation of the university.

Mary Tait, also a member of USED, presented 14 student concerns to the regents at a committee meeting Friday morning. "They didn't address a single point. They wanted the meeting to go on," Rinne said. "When something like this goes on, they may suffer a sleepless night or a cold or something."

But the regents soon forget about student concerns, he said.

Rinne conceded that he didn't know how much good would come of a group of students attending the Regents meeting, but he did think it might help in the future.

Instructors speaking at the rally stressed that faculty and student concerns are similar. One instructor stressed the political options open to the students.

English instructor Bruce Erlich said that the regents could be voted out of office just as easily as they were voted in.

If the students would find a candidate to run for the NU Board of Regents, and then get the students to campaign for him, the student candidate could not help but win, Erlich said.

About 100 students later attended the regents meeting.

The USED organization will meet Monday, Nov. 26 at 7 p.m. at a place to be posted in the Union.

Speakers...

Rocky Yapp, chairman of the University Program Council told the regents that a responsible effort to balance speakers of differing political or ideological views had been performed in the past, but the time spent finding financial support narrowed the choice of speakers who were available.

Schwartzkopf commended the UPC in their effort to balance speakers.

"I was very impressed with the speakers and the student dialogue that followed," Schwartzkopf said.

State Sen. Dave Landis of Lincoln and NU President Ronald Roskens also expressed support for a fee-funded speaker program.

Rinne and Belt said they hope that student support continues. USED plans to discuss programs serving the minority and oppressed groups on campus at the regents' December meeting.
