Utilities...

Two further cuts are also available to save some of the remaining $5,326. Kruescher said it is possible to cut the hours of the union. The feasibility of this option depends on what the students want and the number of people using the union at night. If the City Campus Union closed at 11:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday, instead of 12 p.m. and the East Union closed at 11 p.m. Friday and Saturday and closed at 5 p.m. on Sundays and an hour earlier during the week, the Union Board could save about $1,135, Kruescher said.

HE SAID that the closings would not be temporary, but would be a policy for the future. He added that greater savings could be made in the future with the closings.

Kruescher explained that currently the union pays utilities by the square foot, $891, but in the future a meter will be installed to determine the exact amount of utilities the union uses. With the meters, the Union would not be charged for utilities shut off at night.

A personnel cut may also be a way to make up for utility money. Kruescher said that a savings of about $2,000 could be made from personnel cuts.

Although cuts in the union are being made, Kruescher said that salaries of union employees will increase from 11 to 15 percent. Because the union employees are employees of the university and are subject to raises by the NU Board of Regents, a salary raise is inevitable next year because the regents plan a salary increase in next year's budget. The minimum wage which is scheduled to increase in January, also will cause an increase in employee salaries, Kruescher said.

ANOTHER OPTION, Kruescher said, is that he may ask Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Richard Armstrong to take a deficit from student banking. This would mean that the union would use interest from the student account, which adds up to about $68,000, to pay the rest of the bill. Kruescher said he asked Armstrong if the interest from student account could be used for the remaining $10,000, but Armstrong said no. He said he may ask for $4,000 now.

For future utility bills, Kruescher said he wants the university to pay for the services they receive from the union. He said the services include meeting rooms, home-economics classrooms, staff offices and labs held in the East Campus kitchen.

"It's only fair that the university pay for its share," Kruescher said. "If the university does not pay, student fees would have to increase."

The operating expenses of the union, which continue to rise, will require in the future that student fees be increased or that program and services will be cut, Kruescher said.

Long term changes in the union, such as renovation of the bookstore, the Colonial room and the Crib will all add to the union as a money making institution and may defray student costs, he said.

Correction

The story that appeared on page seven of the Monday issue of the Daily Nebraskan incorrectly reported that Katie Rinn was the first woman to be elected to the NU Board of Regents.

However, Christine Baker was elected to the board from the NU medical school in 1976.
