Regents split on petitions' effect

A UNL regent said the petitions calling for dissolution of the central administration "are an ill for the university."

James Moylan, regent from Omaha, said, "I think time has shown that we need a central administration. As far as budgeting, it's vital."

He added that the central administration is run as efficiently as it can be.

"Everyone in that building works hard. Many work over-time when it's necessary."

The timing of the petitions is poor, and the effect of them is going to be negative, he said.

In agreement with Moylan was Regent Robert Raun of Minden.

"I haven't seen the petitions, but I think they're ridiculous."

Regent Robert Simmons of Scottsbluff said if the people signing the petitions want an administration that controls all three campuses he is in agreement with them, and believes that such an administration is long overdue. However, if they want the campuses to be separate, UNL will get clobbered in the politics because Omaha has more state senators, he said.

NU President Ronald Roskens said he can understand the frustrations of the times and the faculty criticisms need to be carefully considered and studied. But he said he doesn't intend to engage in any dialogue on the subject via the media.

Faculty Senate President William Campbell said there is a general feeling among the faculty that if the university is faced with financial problems, it may well be time to examine the central administration to see what cuts can be made there.

University Studies appoints new fellows

Two new Fellows have been appointed to UNL's University Studies Faculty, according to University Studies Director Leslie Duly.

The Fellows are Assistant Professor of Art Ellen Taylor Baird and Associate Professor of Geography David J. Wishart.

Professor Baird, whose research speciality is in Latin American Art History, joined the UNL faculty in 1975. Wishart, who also serves as a Graduate Faculty Fellow in the Geography Department, has specialized in the historical geography of frontier settlement.

Professor James O'Hanlon, director of the department of health, physical education and recreation, said he signed the petition because the central administration is asking for cutbacks in the college's budget. He believes similar budget cuts should be considered in the central administration's budget.

Sawyer said he would like to see NU return to an administrative system similar to what existed when Chancellor Clifford Hardin was here.

"This is Nebraska, we don't need a system similar to a state with four or five times the population."

The present system started when UNO was annexed in 1968.

"The addition of UNO didn't warrant the creation of this system. It looked good then, but not now."

"A university is not the administration and buildings, it's the faculty and students," Sawyer said.

He added that, "Only one person didn't want to sign the petition. That person said he came to UNL this fall and was not familiar enough with the situation to take a stand, according to Sawyer."

The petition was out from noon Monday to noon Tuesday, Sawyer said, so there was not enough time to contact all faculty. A minimum of ten faculty signatures is required before a faculty meeting can be called.

Prichard said he does not think the central administration has "any idea of the antagonism that has been building up during the past three or four years."

Prichard said in the 13 years he has been on the UNL faculty, he has never seen faculty morale so low.

"It has been my observation that at the end of Chancellor Hardin's term, we increasingly began to adopt some form of industrial management as the governing system for the university."

"In this situation, rather like Chrysler Corporation, the administration and faculty have become increasingly distant and detached from each other."

If a review of the central administration finds that the leadership on the UNL campus is inhibited from speaking out for needs of UNL, "then the system very badly needs to be abolished," Prichard said.

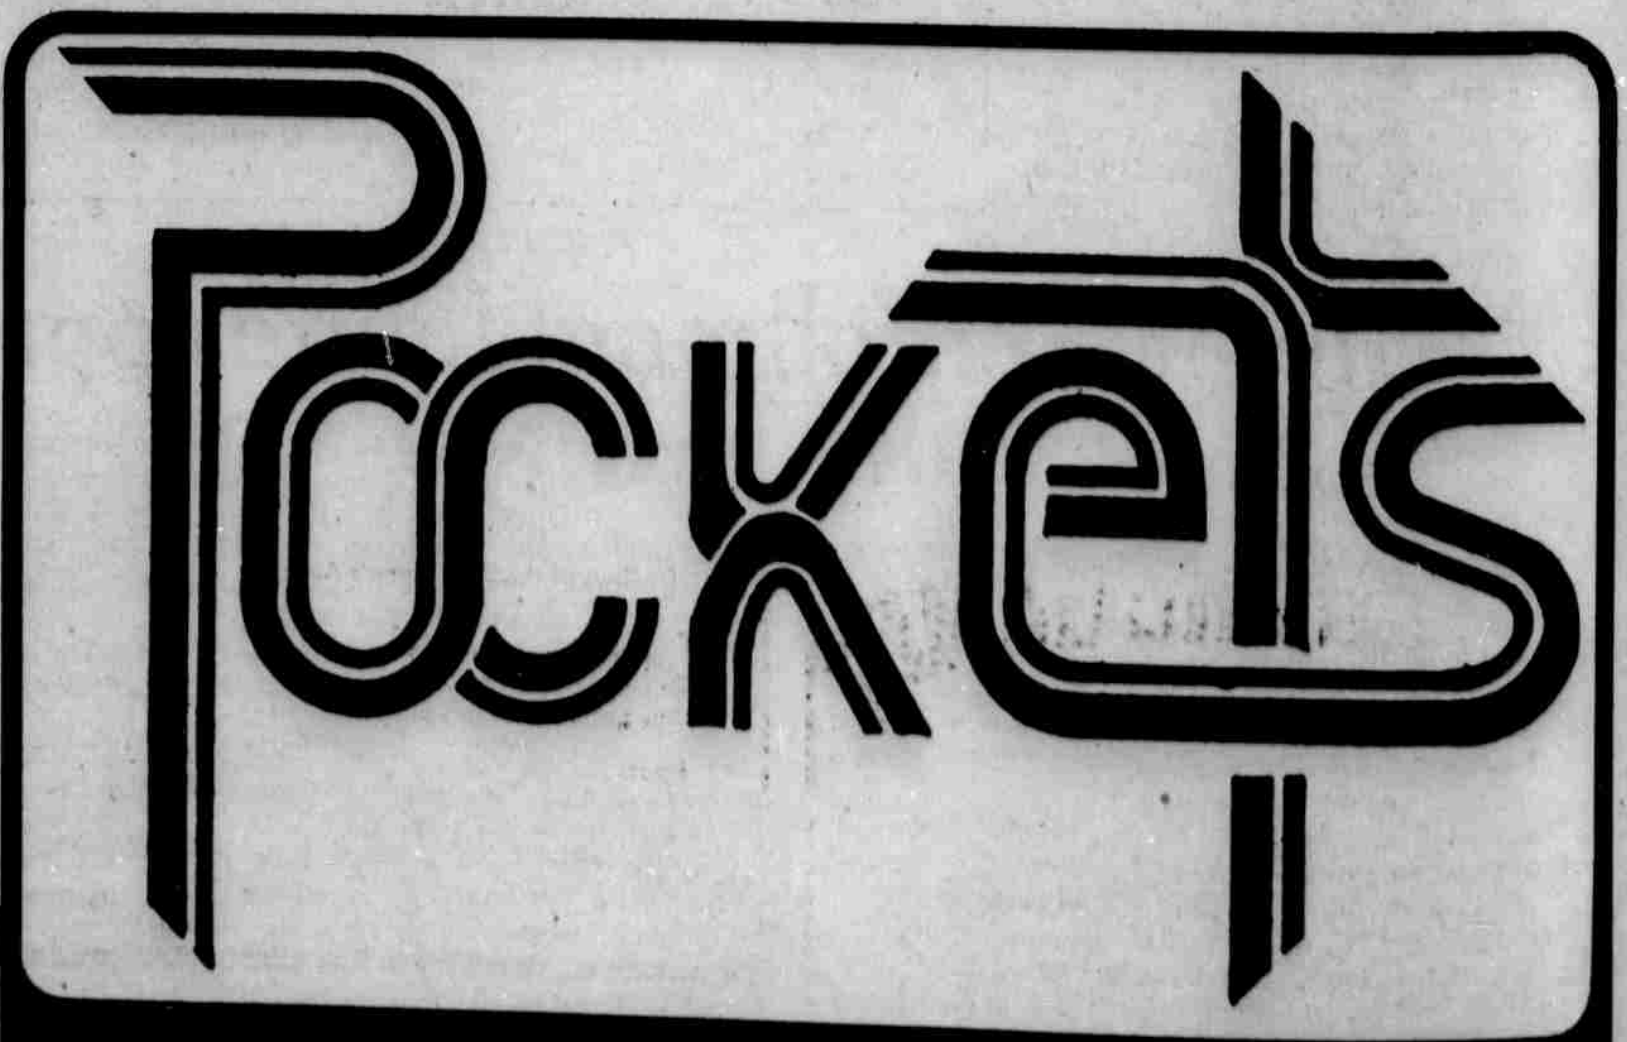

Prichard also said he believes all administrators should teach at least one course a year to get a better idea of faculty problems and student needs. He added that a graduate student could stand by and relieve the administrator when the administrator needs to be gone.

Because Dean Egbert was home ill on Tuesday, Associate Dean Ron Joekel was presented the signed petitions at noon Tuesday.

Joekel said the petition took him by surprise. But because of declining faculty morale he said he was not surprised that the faculty took some form of action.

He added that he believes all programs should be periodically reviewed, including the central administration.

"I don't think the faculty is out to see anyone's head roll. They just want the university to look at the situation."
