Strunk to be next DN editor in chief

Rocky Strunk has been chosen to be the editor in chief of the Daily Nebraskan next semester.

Strunk, 21, a UNL senior from McCook majoring in journalism, was elected to the post by the UNL publication board Monday night.

Strunk said he will make some changes in the management and overall organization that are designed to increase the efficiency of the news room.

"I feel the Daily Nebraskan has an obligation to the university community and must continue to stress policy and ethics involved in the publication of a student newspaper."

"I will also stress better editor-reporter relations through meetings and conferences designed to open channels of communication."

"I also feel the editor in chief has a number of responsibilities which include showing a responsiveness to the Daily Nebraskan readership."

"I recognize that several complicated matters will arise next semester, including the university budget, which will require professional journalistic handling from the news staff," he said.

As well as working on the Daily Nebraskan staff for the last two semesters as associate news editor and legislative reporter, Strunk has also worked as a general assignment reporter on the staff of the Manassas, Va. Journal-Messenger.

Also, Strunk has held several positions at the McCook Gazette, a newspaper that was founded by Strunk's grandfather in 1911.
