Elimination of the bowling alley in proposed remodeling of the Nebraska Union may end fun for bowlers such as freshman Kim Lemen.

The recreation manager of the city union, Rollie Hughes, sought to clarify a reported loss of $28,000 by the bowling alley in 1978. That figure came from a Touche Ross & Co. management audit of the unions.

"The figure is misleading because it puts all of the recreation department's losses on the bowling alley," Hughes said.

The $28,000 deficit was arrived at by subtracting income from vending machines from the net income of the department. That was done by the auditing firm because the vending machine income is almost entirely profit, and therefore offsets operating deficits of other forms of recreation.

The report noted that for the past few years gross revenue and profits have been declining, while recreation expenses, most of which are attributable to bowling, have been increasing.

Hughes said that according to his department's figures, the bowling alley actually made more than $3,000 in 1978.
