disClaimers gets media translator

By Makeyur Sweetie

Gov. Charles Groan has appointed a large, shaggy red sheepdog to act as media translator for State Sen. Bernie dis Claimers.

Groan said the sheepdog's job will be to follow the colorful state senator and reduce his words to a series of barks and grunts, thus making them more understandable to the state's feeble-minded media.

The translator is necessary because certain remarks to the press Sen. disClaimers have been misquoted, Groan said.

For example, he said, the Daily Halfassken reported that disClaimers once said he advocated white homosexuality because it would reduce the white population.

"That was untrue," Groan said. "What Sen. disClaimers actually said was he wouldn't mind seeing whites do constructive, exciting things like beating each other silly with pugil sticks, rewiring their television sets in the bathtub, or experimenting with mind-expanding drugs such as napalm and atrazine."

disClaimers said he welcomed the translator, but said he wouldn't be necessary if reporters would only learn to use tape recorders.

"At first I thought they should take my words down on stone tablets," disClaimers said. "But that took too long. So then I decided tape recorders would be all right."

disClaimers said if the translator works out, he may use him in his private life.

He said several times a day he is misunderstood by people other than the media. A misunderstanding even led to his marriage, he said.

"I was lying on this nice, soft sand at the beach, and saw this girl. I asked her to bury me. The next thing I knew she was introducing me to her parents."

We got scooped again!

Yer fanny looking for seven-footer

The Daily Halfassken has learned through a rival newspaper that a drastic revision has taken place in cheerleading selection at UNL.

"In our never-ending quest for equality in the athletic department, we are searching for a seven-foot cheerleader to fairly represent the taller folks on our basketball team, UNL Athletic Director Scratch Yerfanny said, sucking on a cherry popsicle.

I doubt it seriously, said UNL cheerleading recruiter Jerry Leavemealone.

This job is a real pain, Leavemealone said, with a diseased look on his face.

"I found one girl in a Back to School parade in Wisconsin, but she was on stilts. I don't think she had the shot to be a major college cheerleader, anyway," he said, shaking his head.

"In Alliance, I found three 260-pound girls named Selmon with great speed in the 40, but we couldn't recruit them. Our quota was filled," he added.

"We might have to sign up two Lennon Sisters and have them ride piggyback," Leavemealone lamented.

"And that's only the start of it. There's a Baptist, a used car salesman's son and an ex-Marine on the team and I have to find cheerleaders for all of them," he said, fighting back the tears.

Robkins injured

Unhappy and frustrated about the failure of recent petitions calling for dissolution of the NU Central Administration, faculty members Thursday announced they have decided on an alternative means to eliminate the systems office.

The faculty member is shown jumping from the roof of Rodent's Hall, onto the head of a well-disguised NU President Ron Robkids.

Robkids reportedly donned wig and beard to go jogging. Robkids' press secretary reported that Robkids wore the disguise because an anonymous call tipped Robkids off that violent acts may be perpetrated against him.

Faculty wants shah of UNL to stand trial

An angry mob of UNL faculty stormed Rodents Hall today demanding that the Shah of the NU Central Administration, Ron Robkids, be returned to them to stand trial and return the money he has taken from the UNL budget.

"These administrators are spies and the shah has exploited the budget to only benefit himself and his hand-picked few," shouted Richard Blowhard, one of the leaders of the faculty.

"We are poor, yet they are rich. We want the end of this imperialistic view," exclaimed John Lynchmob, another leader of the instructors.

The NU Bored of Rodents, who were in the building holding a secret meeting, demanded to be released.

Kermit "The Frog" Wagoneer appeared before the crowd and told the faculty that the rodents would agree to be mediators in the controversy. However, the faculty mob pelted Wagoneer with oranges in defiance of what they termed the "imperialistic football team."

As Wagoneer retreated in the building he screamed, "I knew this would happen when we gave those dumb students the right to have political speakers."

The administration hostages were reportedly being treated well. Some were tied and forced to read the central administration's budget request one hundred times. Others were forced to look at the rodents, who also were tied and gagged. One administrator, Billy Urksome, said the psychological strain of looking at the rodents for a long period of time was "humiliating and sickening."

Efforts to release the hostages has been minimal. UNL administrators are reluctant to help in the release of the hostages, especially the rodents, according to UNL Chancellor Roy Dung.

"To be honest, we really don't need them (administrators and rodents) anyway—UNL could benefit without them. Except I will miss the rodents' meetings. They were so much fun," Dung said.

ANUS President Spuddy Kooky, who was present at the demonstration, praised the faculty's stand.

"Maybe now we can get something done, like legalizing marijuana, booze and gambling," Kooky said.
