Omaha case dismissed

A lawsuit brought by a UNL law student in U.S. District Court in Omaha was dismissed Tuesday, according to the two attorneys in the case.

No official court order was available Tuesday from the case heard before U.S. District Court Judge Albert Schatz. The lawsuit, filed by Robert A. Laughlin, a UNL freshman law student, charges Omaha Westside School District 66 and its superintendents with "illegal and unconstitutional" practices in selecting school board members. An amended complaint filed late last week added Gov. Charles Thone and Attorney General Paul Douglas to the list of defendants.

Roger Holthaus, Laughlin's attorney, said Judge Schatz Tuesday dismissed Laughlin's request for a preliminary injunction against school board elections Feb. 21 and granted the defendant's motion for dismissal.

Holthaus said it was his interpretation of the hearing that the judge ruled the constitutional questions raised by the suit were for the state courts to decide, not the district courts.

Verne Moore Jr., attorney for the defendants, said he understood the case had been dismissed. However, he declined to offer reasons for the dismissal until he could read the judge's official order.

"The merits of the case still have not been heard," Holthaus said. He said he was surprised to discover during the hearing that a motion to dismiss had been presented since he had no prior notice of the motion.

Moore said he had filed the motion to dismiss Monday afternoon.

Holthaus said an appeal or an independent action may be sought to further the case, but cautioned that nothing could be determined until he read Judge Schatz's official order.

Holthaus added that he had received about 30 phone calls Tuesday from District 66 members.

Laughlin filed the suit because he said the caucus that selects school board candidates does not allow for absentee, disabled or sick voters.
