Sample selection opposed

By Rose Fitzpatrick

NU Vice President for Academic Affairs Steven Sample has run into opposition in the selection process for a new president of Auburn University in Alabama, according to the editor of Auburn's student newspaper.

Rick Harmon, the editor, said Alabama Gov. Fob James, who also is a member of the Auburn Board of Trustees, wants to hire an Alabaman for the job instead of Sample.

In a recent trustees' vote, Sample tied for the post with Alabaman Hanly Funderburk 6-6. The problem, Harmon explained, is that faculty and student boards involved in the selection favor Sample for the job.

He said Funderburk's nomination is a "stop Sample" move.

Harmon said that at a meeting that lasted eight minutes, the governor asked only where Funderburk was from. Upon learning Funderburk is from Alabama, James voted for him.

Harmon said his paper recently printed a letter to the governor asking James not to interfere in the selection and reminding the governor that James had called for a nationwide search process.

Harmon said the hiring tie-up could be a stalling technique.

The fear is that while the process is stalled Sample may get another job offer and accept, Harmon said.

Frances French, an Auburn faculty member, said she hopes that Sample doesn't withdraw.

"The faculty is disturbed and embarrassed," French said.

French helped circulate a faculty petition that asked some of the board members not to confine their choices for president to geographical factors and that the search be reopened if Sample drops out.

She said the petition was signed by 283 of about 1,000 faculty members. French said the petition was representative of the entire faculty because it was circulated during an exam week on "dead day," when few faculty members were on campus. She said almost all faculty approached signed the petition. Some administrators called to support the petition but couldn't go on record, French said.
