

Warner: education funds shouldn't be restricted

By Bill Graf

Government spending should be cut in these inflationary times, but education should not be restricted, the chairman of the Legislature's Appropriations Committee said Tuesday evening.

Sen. Jerome Warner of Waverly, who spoke to about 80 people at the Young Republicans meeting Tuesday, said nobody can say much about the cost of most goods and services but "the cost of government we can vote on."

In quoting a friend, Warner said, "It's not like General Motors. They can recall an automobile. But you can't recall a math class."

Warner, a vice chairman of the Young Republicans in the early 50s, also talked about the Legislature's current phase.

While it may seem that the Legislature is a sea of indecision, he said, "Individual senators are trying to decide what is the right thing to do."

"Tomorrow the media will probably report that the Legislature advanced seven bills containing collective appropriations of $650,000 with a minimum of discussion. The implication will be that the Legislature didn't think much about it. That's inaccurate."

Individual consideration

Warner explained that it is part of the process for senators to consider individually the budget legislation before them.

He said he supported both the recent legislation raising the drinking age from 19 to 20 and pending legislation which would outlaw drug paraphernalia, although he said neither issue was "big" with him.

Members of the Young Republicans elected new officers at the meeting, in the Nebraska Union.

Past Young Republican Treasurer Dale Davison was elected chairman.

Davison, 19, a sophomore majoring in engineering, said that he would get the club more actively involved in the election this fall, increase membership of the Young Republicans on campus and try to draw "big name" speakers.

Others elected to Young Republican posts were Vice Chairman Scott Spilker, 20, a junior agriculture student; Secretary Gwen Knobel, 19, a sophomore majoring in home economics; Treasurer Tom Lechtenberg, 20, a sophomore in Engineering College; Committeewoman Cindy Johnson, 20, a journalism junior and Committee-

Adult 'Back to School' workshop set

A "Back to School" workshop for adults interested in enrolling or returning to UNL will be March 25 at 6:30 p.m. at the Nebraska Center for Continuing Education.

The free workshop program will include information on general admission and registration procedures, financial aid, individual academic advising sessions and assistance in preregistration. The workshop is sponsored by the UNL Division of Continuing Studies and Academic Services.

UNL representatives from all of the colleges, the Division of Continuing Studies, Academic Affairs, Career man Dan Lindstrom, 19, a sophomore studying agriculture and animal science.

Schwartzkopf speaks

Also at the meeting was NU Regent Ed Schwartzkopf. Schwartzkopf spoke in support of presidential-hopeful George Bush. Schwartzkopf said Bush was bright and had stick-to-itiveness as well as legislative and executive experience.

"Bush says that within one year he can cut inflation in half and in another year cut it in half again, and I believe him," Schwartzkopf said.

Schwartzkopf said he "was real pleased with the Legislature's new budget bill."

"It's not enough to move us ahead. But at least we won't be sliding back anymore," he said.

Placement and Financial Aids, will be on hand at the workshop to answer questions and work with individuals.

In addition to getting information, adult students may fill out admission forms and work sheets and have them ready to submit by mail for summer preregistration. If former students preregister for the workshop and indicate the dates they attended the University, their transcript will be given to the proper adviser at the workshop. Transfer students may bring their transcripts from colleges and ask to have an adviser make an unofficial evaluation of their credits.
