Party hosts provide guests

minutes—no problem."

If you're determined to throw a party with more than a chip-and-dip-menu, but don't have the time or ability to spread a feast yourself, try a catering service.

Mobile Host's usual, however, is catering for parties of a smaller capacity, with the minimum requirement calling for at least 20 persons.

By spending a little extra money you can have a caterer not only spread it for you, but prepare it, deliver it, serve it, and clean it up as well.

Grand openings, reunions, company picnics, and banquets are frequent events serviced by Mobile Host, Hughes said.

Say, for example, you want to serve some big sandwiches. Try Super Sub's six-foot creation. This giant loaf of French bread stuffed with your choice of six meats and two cheeses will serve 25 to 30 people, according to Pat Morgan, Super Sub caterer. For $39.95, Super Sub will prepare the sandwich, deliver it and serve it if requested, she said.

Their most popular service is the Open Buffet, he said. With a wide selection offered to guests, they are not forced to eat only what the host or hostess likes.

Students learn

By Lori McGinnis

Party givers need not hire a service to cater their party. They can easily do it themselves.

Dean Young, the instructor of a catering class in the Human Nutrition and Food Service Management Dept. teaches his students practical catering.

"No student is going to call and have someone bring something in," Young said. "The price is astronomical."

By making and serving the food themselves, party givers can save money, he said. Catering services charge for the food, the delivery and the service, he said. By catering the party yourself, you pay only for the food.

The catering class teaches students how to plan, manage and finance a menu for a party, Young said.

Young said catering requires planning ahead and buying food suitable to the occasion.

For the not so hungry, Super Sub also offers a three foot sandwich, Morgan said. At $19.95, it will serve from 15 to 25 persons.

In addition to sandwich catering, Super Sub offers a Party Platter. These combine the customer's choice of meats, relishes, and fruit, with prices determined on amounts and selection, Morgan said.

For a more formal and somewhat larger occasion, try Mobile Host Catering. According to owner Allen Hughes, Mobile Host has "served as many as 2,500 in 20
