caterers can do rest

Their menu includes ribs, sirloin steaks, chicken, prime rib hors-d'oeuvres and pasta dishes. Depending on the customer's budget, salads, rolls, and vegetables can be added, Hughes said.

salad, and three boxes of rolls, for $55. Kentucky Fried Chicken offers various packages for up to 135 people, but Bouc said they can accommodate more if needed.

If chicken is your choice, have the Colonel cater. If he's not available, The Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurants of Lincoln can fill in. According to manager Marguerite Bouc, the package for up to 35 people costs $1.57 per person. It includes 72 pieces of fried chicken, two gallons of Serving baked alaska or a souffle would not be suitable for a party unless the host is willing to stay in the kitchen, Young said.

Young said. It would cost about $20 to make a relish tray for about 10 people, he said.

For a higher price, a party giver can serve hot hors d'oeuvres like bacon wrapped chestnuts or shrimp and a punch bowl filled with fresh fruit. For a small party this would be about $100, he said.

The students in the class learn how to serve food at many kinds of occasions, and how to pick the appropriate food for each. For a casual party finger food would be best, he said.

Students in the catering class also learn where to shop for food and cooking equipment, how to garnish food, fold napkins and arrange flowers, he said.

Finger foods like cream puffs stuffed with meat, cheese balls and relish trays are simple to make yet elegant, he said.

Serving a relish tray with raw broccoli and cauliflower or crackers and dip is one of the nicest things a party giver can serve.
