Two students take journalism honors

Two UNL School of Journalism students were winners in the February writing competition of the William Randolph Hearst Foundation Journalism Awards Program. Placing first in the competition in writing personality profiles was Margaret Stafford, 21, a senior in the news-editorial sequence. She wrote an in-depth profile of James Risser, winner of two Pulitzer Prizes and an NU journalism graduate who is chief of the Washington Bureau of the Des Moines

Register. Deborah Shanahan from LaVista, placed 10th. She wrote a profile of Omaha sportscaster Lyell Bremser.

Stafford's winning entry earned a $1,200 scholarship and an opportunity to compete in the National Writing Championships in May. Shanahan received a $100 scholarship. The School of Journalism received a matching amount in both instances.

Both stories were written for the depth reporting class of Prof. Jim Patten.
