

Roommates . . .

"The stereotype of an American is a very cold person, but Mike and other Nebraskans have helped change my mind to a certain degree," Daniel said.

Mike observed that living in two cultures under one roof isn't all roses, but their conflicts are minor. Music was the main cultural clash Mike experienced.

"When we first became roommates, he played some Chilean music. It was fine for a while, but too much exposure to it would drive me wacky," he said.

Humor has crept into their relationship continually over the past two years.

Mike commented, "I found out the women in Chile are very conservative, and I had a heck of a time teaching him 'the American way' of meeting women."

But Daniel thought something else he learned was quite important.

"One of the things I am grateful to Mike for, is that he made me realize how good beer tastes."

Mike chimed in: "And now he's a real beer man."
