ing him earlier, Brown said. The somewhat mild reaction by the board the first time might have been a sort of invitation for more, he said.

Kathy Chenault, next semester's Daily Nebraskan associate news editor said, "I wanted to work for a paper where people have pride in what they are doing."

She asked the board to "severely punish" Strunk because the ramifications of his actions were greater than just damaging the credibility of the Daily Nebraskan.

Cuca then changed his motion to call for dismissing Strunk, rather than accepting his resignation, and to also withhold his pay. The motion passed unanimously. Strunk, speaking briefly after the meeting, said, "I regret that it had to happen to the University of Nebraska, the Daily Nebraskan, and the staff."
