

ASUN resolution supports Pub Board in Coe dispute

By Patti Gallagher

A resolution supporting the action of the UNL Publications Board in dealing with the James Coe letter disclosure was passed from new business to old business, Wednesday night at the ASUN Senate meeting.

The resolution, passed on a 17-13-1 vote, stated in part that the "Senate condemns the regents' resolution" (asking for further action on the incident), and "condemns the regents' threat to amend the UNL bylaws concerning the Publications Board."

The regents said at their Friday meeting that action might be taken to restructure the Publications Board.

The Senate heard from two Publications Board members, Chairman Mark Bowens and Board Member Hubert Brown, reviewed action taken by the board and the NU

Board of Regents in the handling of the Coe letter.

ASUN President Renee Wessels said she met Wednesday with Interim Chancellor Robert Rutford and others to discuss the matter.

Wessels also said she agreed with the action in the incident, saying, "the board acted in a very judicious manner."

In other action, a resolution requiring all students to take six hours of ethnic and women studies courses was killed on the Senate floor and moved into committee.

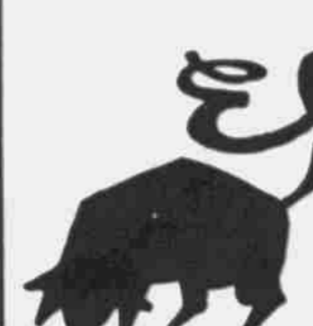

The resolution would require the courses to be included as part of each student's regular social science or humanities requirements. It would not, however, require students to take any additional hours in social sciences or humanities than is presently mandated by their college.
